Mortgage Matters

The Fed Has Acted!

September 20, 2007

The Fed has finally started a rate-cutting cycle with a half point reduction in the Fed Funds rate down to 4.75% from 5.25%. The rate cut was done to help forestall some of the adverse effects on the broader economy that might have otherwise arisen from the disruption in financial markets and to promote moderate growth over time. The market took this to mean that the Fed will take all necessary steps in terms of rate cuts to try to prevent a possible recession as long as inflation remains in check.

So what does this mean for mortgage rates?

The immediate beneficiaries are all borrowers who have home equity loans – with the Fed Funds rate cut, the Prime rate has also dropped half a point to 7.75% from 8.25%. Therefore, all home equity loan rates have dropped by the same half percent. Certainly good news.

First Mortgage rates, however, have not gotten the same immediate relief. With concerns over the inflationary effects of the Fed move, the Bond Market has actually gone the opposite direction with yields on the 10 Year Treasury over 4.50%. So it's back to data-watching - and if the economic data continues to produce weaker-than-expected numbers, we should hopefully soon find relief in First Mortgage rates. This week has produced a mixed bag of data – a bond-friendly consumer inflation figure and weaker national housing starts should help to hopefully turn this around.

Bill Gross, manager of the world's biggest bond fund PIMCO, predicts that the Fed Funds rate will go down to 3.75% which will produce lower rates in the months to come. US GDP is expected to slow to 1.25% - 1.75% over the next 12 months. "If that is the case, the Fed has to start now and significantly in their downward trek", Gross said.

From his mouth to the Bond Market's ears! If this does occur, there is light at the end of the rate tunnel – we just need to keep on driving!

The Manhattan Mortgage Company

P.S. An interesting comment on the markets...

Recap of Jim Cramer's comments on Wall Street Confidential (Wednesday September 18):

Moving on to New York Real Estate, Cramer says business is booming and recommends private player Manhattan Mortgage, which is for those who need a mortgage over $1 million. The New York Market is different from that of the rest of the country because "You have a tight bid-ask, you have foreign buyers who are the marginal buyers, and you have no new construction," while in other cities, there is excessive construction, no new buyers and buyers paying half of what the property is actually worth. It's unfathomable how much different Manhattan is from the rest of the country," Cramer said. "It's a tale of two cities. It's New York City and then it's the rest of the country."

The Good Old Days

Remember When the First Snowstorms Hit Here in September?

By Dan Rattiner

If there is ever proof needed about the existence of global warming, one need not look any further than the changes in the weather that have taken place here in September during the last half-century.

Today, September in the Hamptons is little different than August. You get temperatures in the 80s and sometimes even in the 90s — September 19 was such a day — and there are balmy breezes and tons of people enjoying themselves on the ocean beaches.

It is not until the second or third week in October that it finally begins to cool down. The snows of winter don't come until December.

Compare what we have today with the weather we had in the Hamptons in the 1950s. Who can forget the summer people hurrying to get out of the Hamptons on Labor Day weekend to beat the first of the winter's snowstorms?

The storms would come within ten days after Labor Day back then. From the closets of the year-rounders, out would come the scarves and mittens, the skates and snow shovels, the snowplows, the hockey sticks and sleds and the snowshoes. The huge snowdrifts sometimes drifted so high that people were unable to get out of their houses without climbing out a window from the second floor. Only cars and trucks with heavy chains wrapped around their tires were allowed on the roads — it was the law. We didn't have snow tires in those days.

As for the summer people, they had to get their kids to school at Choate, Brearley or Chapin in the city for the first day of classes on September 7, and they did not have vehicles up for the task of driving in blizzard weather. The

The huge snowdrifts sometimes drifted so high that people were unable to get out of their houses.

summer people drove BMWs and Bentleys and Ferraris and Mercedes and other European cars, just as they do today, all fine automobiles but none created to handle the heavy winters here in America. Also, the summer people lived in big summer "cottages" that were famously not heated. So these families knew they would freeze to death if they stayed even a few days after Labor Day. So they were terrified about not getting out while the getting was good.

In those circumstances, the county erected EVACUATION ROUTE signs all along the Montauk Highway pointing west that you can still see today, not because the summer people didn't know which way was New York City, but because those families who waited until the last minute were often so panicked and crazed that they would lose their bearings trying to get out of here. When a big oil baron, his chauffeur and wife and kids were found frozen in their limousine by the side of Hill Street in Southampton after a storm in September of 1949, the county knew it had to take action. And so came the signs.

The locals were used to the sudden change of the weather right after Labor Day, of course. They'd chuckle when they watched the summer people in their wild states, sometimes with the women still wearing the curlers in their hair and the children still in their bathing suits, weaving all over the road fighting to beat the early snowflakes and get ahead of the other summer people just in front of them.

After a day or two, everything would go quiet and the locals could walk around and enjoy shopping in the stores and they would have

Save Sag Harbor's upcoming October 7 benefit will be held at the Old Whaler's Church on Union Street in Sag Harbor. For $50 a ticket, the public is invited to the party where food and drink will be served and Alexa Ray Joel will perform, and participants can vent their displeasure at CVS Pharmacy's attempts to ruin the town. The Benefit Committee for the event sounds like a guest list for some of the summer's best bashes, with Kelly Ripa, Ken Auletta, Christie Brinkley, Carl and Christine Bernstein, Jane and Jimmy Buffet, Chuck and Leslie Close, E.L. and Helen Doctorow, Nora Ephron and Nick Pileggi, Ina Garten, April Gornik and Eric Fischl, Mia Grosjean, Billy Joel, Donna Karan, and Russell Simmons all on the list

Christie Brinkley opened her private beachfront Water Mill cottage to the New York Post's Page Six Magazine last week. The home was on the market last spring for nearly $8 million, but Brinkley quickly pulled it after spending another night in there. In the accompanying article, Brinkley says, "scaling down is the trend. I think that big houses are passé." The model/mogul also recently acquired a 2.6-acre North Haven residence for $11 million and put her Bridgehampton mansion on the market.

Globetrotters Angelina Jolie and Brad Pitt are rumored to be bringing their multicultural family to a home in Manhattan. The tabloid-targeted twosome was seen shopping for a New York City pad and may soon be sporting a Hamptons summer home as well.

The annual Hamptons vs. NYC Corcoran Softball Challenge Cup takes place this Saturday, September 29 at Flying Point Field in Southampton. The important real estate agency pit its East End power players against its New York City agents for the viewing pleasure of the public who have been coaxed by at least one of them into buying a high-priced home.

One time Hamptons bad boy Norman Mailer is now taking his contemporary creative nonfiction style to the serious subject of God, writing an upcoming book titled On God. Meanwhile, Mailer's wife, Norris Church, just launched her first novel, Cheap Diamonds, with a party in friend Diane Fisher's Manhattan penthouse. Editing power players Nan and Gay Talese were in attendance and partying.

THE LITTLE BENCH THAT CAME BACK TO THE EAST END

By Dan Rattiner

There were many tragedies on 9/11. But there were also instances of great heroism. Perhaps the most amazing of these acts was the struggle that took place on board United Airlines Flight 93 on its way from Newark to San Francisco. Terrorists had threatened the passengers, broken into the cockpit while flying over Pennsylvania, killed the pilots and began to fly the plane themselves. The passengers noticed the plane turning around. In fact, United 93 was headed for Washington, DC, where the terrorists planned to plow it into the White House.

The passengers, guarded by terrorists armed with guns and knives, now began to hunch down in their seats and, unnoticed, call friends and family to tell them of their plight. On the phone, they learned the shocking news that other planes, also hijacked by terrorists, had already ripped through three other buildings in Washington and New York. Apparently, this one was destined to go there, too. Unless they could stop it.

And so the rebellion began. The unarmed passengers overpowered their guards, fought their way into the cockpit and, in the struggle that followed, caused United 93 to pitch forward and head nose down, straight into a farm field near the town of Shanksville where it exploded and burned. All on board, more than a hundred people, died so that others could live.

The next week, people here on the East End were saddened to learn that among the passengers on United 93 was Linda Gronlund, a popular local girl who grew up in Sag Harbor. She graduated LIU Southampton in 1976 Magna Cum Laude and her father ran the Gronlund Clothing Store on Bay Street. At the time of the crash, she was working for IBM.

In the years that followed 9/11, a bayfront park in Sag Harbor was renamed after her. And in 2004, the Alumni Association of LIU Southampton College took up a collection from its membership to buy a park bench bearing a plaque with Ms. Gronlund's name on it.

Arrangements were made to place it on campus in front of Abney Peak, a small historic building located next to the Administration Building. Sitting on the park bench, you would look out at the college windmill, the trademark of the University.

One year later, in a shocking development, LIU announced that they were closing Southampton College and putting the college campus up for sale. They were pulling out. The land, all 81 acres of it, would be sold to the highest bidder.

About six months after that, Mrs. Doris Gronlund, drove over to the college to look at the memorial to her daughter, but found that it wasn't there anymore. She spoke to one of the administrators.

"We're leaving," she was told. "Things are being moved to one of our three other campuses. I guessed somebody must have moved your bench somewhere."

ample time to put the chains on their cars and trucks and the big steel snowplow blades on the front as they prepared for the upcoming blizzards.

The highlight of September, back then, was the merry snowball fights held every Saturday and Sunday in Mashashimuet Park in Sag Harbor. Young men representing each community in the Hamptons - Montauk, East Hampton, Bridgehampton, Southampton, Hampton Bays and Westhampton Beach would assemble in the park to compete. Each town had its own banners and matching color scarves and uniforms. And the winning team would get the Snowball Cup. Then, everybody would repair to one of the taverns in that town for an apple cider and to watch the final two weeks of baseball season on the 6-inch black and white TV behind the bar. Who can forget those days? Now gone, all gone.

The women, of course, stayed home and cooked and cleaned and had babies. This was before Women's Lib.

The 1956 Olympic Winter Games were held in Bridgehampton that September. The Swiss won most of the medals. Remains of the big ski jump can still be found north of that town where the Bridge Golf Course is today.

By October, Agawam Park in Southampton and Town Pond in East Hampton were frozen over. The iceboats plied at speeds up to seventy miles per hour across Mecox Bay. Snowmobiles — yes they were invented in the Hampton in the 1950s at the Bulova Watch Factory in Sag Harbor — roared through the woods of Northwest. And the artists in Springs spent the end of the month building thirty-foot tall ice castles that stayed frozen all the way to the judging that took place on Halloween. Jackson Pollock led the design team for a winner one year. By the end of October, the entire Atlantic Ocean had frozen over.

Incidentally, you may know that the worst storm ever in history to hit the Hamptons was the Hurricane of 1938, which roared through on September 23 that year.

What you didn't know was that this hurricane, coming up from the Caribbean with its tropical temperatures and hot torrents of rain, arrived here in September - the hurricane season ended in mid-August back then - and was so late that it ran into the snowstorms and the 10 foot blanket of snow that had settled over the area, and in an hour melted every bit of it. The subsequent flooding turned Montauk into an island and flooded the downtowns of Westhampton Beach and Southampton so badly that the next day the dead victims had to be picked up in rowboats.

Those were the days.

Riverhead Community to Include Indoor Skiing and Ice Skating

By Dan Rattiner

Last Thursday, by a vote of 4 to 1, the Riverhead Town Board approved what will be the largest single structure ever built on Long Island. It will be the centerpiece of the 3,500 acres that used to be the Grumman warplane factory and airport complex, which has been abandoned for the last ten years and which Grumman, before leaving, gave to the Town of Riverhead for one dollar. (Grumman also sold for one dollar the beautiful old carousel that the employees used to use for family picnics on the property. They sold it to the Village of Greenport. That merrygo-round is now the centerpiece of that village, right on the waterfront.)

A firm called Riverhead Resorts will pay the Town of Riverhead $155 million for just 755 acres of the former 3,500acre site where they intend to build this huge structure. Some of the balance of the land has also been leased or sold for millions of dollars to some software and other high-tech businesses that intend to build office buildings in the industrial park section of the land. And there is still more land to be allocated as well.

This has been quite a real estate bargain. It cost them a dollar. Before they are done, Riverhead will have sold off this property to be used as they have planned for approximately $300 million. Not too shabby.

"With this sale to Riverhead Resorts now approved," said longtime Town Board member Philip J. Cardinale, "we can now retire the entire town debt and still have $100 million left over."

Riverhead Resorts had, of course, presented a scale model of the 755-acre site to the Town to show what they intended to do before the Meanwhile, around the lake, there will be nine separate "theme" resorts.

I think you know where I am going with this. The 35 story tall mountain, in existence where there was no mountain before, will be made from land that will be excavated in order to dig the lake. From the little alpine village, one will see that it is dotted with grassland, meadows and forests — not really fit for skiing on.

However, this mountain will be hollow. It will be covered with roofing material, which will be covered with greenery. Inside, in the hollowed out part, air conditioners will reduce temperatures to 20 degrees F. Artificial hardpack snow will be spread around. There will be ski jumps and ski runs. You know the drill. You've seen pictures of these ski resorts in such unlikely places as Dubai, Shanghai and Australia. Well, this one will be bigger than any of those. In the end, after more than a decade of construction, it is expected that this project will have a value in the billions of dollars.

Riverhead Resorts, which won the right to build this enormous project, is a joint venture of five large European firms who have built resort projects such as this all around the world.

You've seen pictures of these ski resorts in such unlikely places such as Dubai. Well, this one will be bigger than any of those.

Town agreed to the sale. The scale model shows a 35 story tall mountain, an adjacent wilderness resort, a 90-acre lake, numerous hotels, a convention center and apartments and condos that can only be described as a small Alpine town, as yet unnamed. It will have a Main Street and shops on both sides. And because of the mountain, many of the shops, or shoppes, will sell ski equipment.

(Three years ago, when Riverhead announced that they would accept bids for this 755-acre "recreation" part of the land, the idea of a ski mountain was proposed by a Scottish developer named Tom Stewart, who, it soon turned out, did not have the $100 million in reserve that he said he did. But after he retired from the bidding, others more comfortably backed came in to make the idea of this ski mountain a viable entry.)

During the first year of the bidding, Riverhead Resorts had four different competitors interested in the land. By last year, it came down to only one other competitor. That was a project called Epcal Center, backed by a consortium of several Long Island developers, including Charles Wang, formerly of Computer Associates and now a co-partner in the reconstruction of the Nassau Coliseum, and the Petrocelli Family, the developers of the wildly successful Atlantis Marine World aquarium on Riverhead's Main Street.

By April of this year, each of these two remaining entries had offered to buy the 755 acres for $125 million.

Epcal Center's project was completely different. The Epcal team presented a scale model of the 755 acres that showed the land mountainfree. Instead, the centerpiece of their project, initially, was an 80,000 seat racetrack stadium that would feature racing cars such as those you might find at Daytona or Indianapolis, and a huge equestrian center that would offer horse racing, horse shows, jumping and horse breeding facilities and a looping motorway around the project for antique and classic car enthusiasts. It would also have a shopping center, apartments, condos and a lake. (After worries about noise were made public, Epcal reduced the size of the planned stadium to 10.000 seats.)

The Riverhead Town Board, after duly noting that both projects would be built exactly where the old Grumman fighter jet airport runway was, voted 4 to 1 for the Europeans.

Riverhead, from 1880 to 1970, was the largest and most prosperous town on eastern Long Island. Because of its geographic location in the very center of Suffolk County, it had been named the county seat. The County Courthouses, Legislative and Executive buildings were built here. The county jail was also built here.

And because of its location at the headwaters of Peconic Bay and at the terminus of the Peconic River, which feeds into the bay, it became a transportation center for the East End. The biggest boost came in the 1880s when the railroad came through. And so for the next 90 years, the town thrived mightily.

In the 1960s, however, the control of the County was wrestled westward toward Nassau County as the result of the passage of the oneman one vote law. Soon there were pressures to move all the civic buildings out of Riverhead. In the end, they compromised. Three quarters of the county seat buildings moved to a campus in Hauppauge. The rest remained in Riverhead.

Next came the superhighways, which caused the collapse of the railroads. And then came the collapse of farming, specifically potato farming. The final blow was the loss of Grumman, the largest employer on Long Island at the time. It merged with Northrop, moved to Texas and California and all but abandoned Long Island.

It is fair to say that an entire generation in Riverhead grew up here in a depressed area that included the abandonment of almost half of Main Street's buildings, the abandonment of many houses in town and a precipitous decline

In the Cockpit

You'll Never Get Me Up in One of Those Things, Never, Never

By Dan Rattiner

As I write this, my 25-year-old son David is up above the Hamptons in a little red biplane doing spins and dives and barrel rolls, and then corkscrew turns downward with white smoke trailing behind him only to pull out at the last minute upside down. Perhaps you saw him.

It is me that is responsible for him doing this.

It all came about because last Saturday my girlfriend and I attended Fun Day at East Hampton Airport. There were antique automobiles, airplanes from the 1920s — some were little more than flying bicycles — people selling souvenirs and snow cones and jams and jellies and a whole lot of other fun.

Perhaps the highlight of the day, for me anyway, was when I was coaxed into the cockpit of a little red acrobatic plane with shiny biplane wings that was sitting on the runway not moving, but looking very cute.

"Would you like to sit in the cockpit?" Bruno Shreck had asked me a few minutes before. "I can get the owner. She's a stunt pilot. And this is her airplane."

"Sure," I said. I wasn't thinking clearly.

The owner, a young, pretty woman, came over and we shook hands and she introduced me to her husband, who is a test pilot. Then she introduced me to the plane, which she said was a Pitts S-2c, a little red biplane about 19-feet-long that had been built especially for stunt flying about ten years ago.

"This is Dan from Dan's Papers," Bruno said by way of introduction. "Everybody reads Dan's Papers."

Birdie Saurenman — for that was her name — swung open the clear plastic bubble cockpit and showed me where to step on the wing in order to swing my leg over into the rear of two cockpits. Soon, I was sitting comfortably in the seat.

"All the instruments are in here," I said.

WHOOOOOOEEEEEEEAAHHHHHHHH

By David Lion Rattiner

Most people would get nervous knowing they have to put on a parachute in order to safely ride as a passenger in a stunt plane the size of a small red car. I am no exception. I was nervous as hell while Eddie, my stunt pilot for the day at East Hampton Airport, rigged me up. "Okay, so in case something happens, you pull the cord like this," he said, motioning with his arms, extending them out.

"Okay, I think I got it."

Eddie's wife Birdie began to strap me inside of the cockpit, which was basically a hole in the front of the plane that had an altimeter, a speedometer, a stick and a throttle. "You're gonna have a great time," she said with a smile.

"We'll do a bit of upside down flying, some loops and a couple of rolls if it's alright with you. Hopefully you won't throw up," Eddie drawled.

Thank God he's from the South, I thought. Being around a pilot with a southern accent is comforting to me for some reason. It's like being with a chef that has an Italian accent. "Well, as they say in Top Gun, let's kick the tires and light the fires!" Eddie grinned with joy as he peered out of the back cockpit looking kind of like a groundhog with a mesh hat on popping out of the ground. He put on his goggles and I put on my headset. I felt like I was in a cartoon.

In less then five seconds, we were airborne and we could see all of East Hampton on this perfectly clear day. Eddie was a real philosopher about this, "It sure is nice to breathe some fresh air ain't it? Isn't this just beautiful?"

"It sure is," I said over the headset with a fake southern accent. It just naturally happened.

Less than a hundred feet away was Bruno Schreck, who was flying his Cessna aircraft directly in front and to the right of us. We were in a classic military formation and, in midair, seeing another plane this close was surreal. "Don't get caught in his jet wash," I said over the radio, which received a couple of laughs. I started to get really into what was going on.

"Why aren't they in the front cockpit?"

"The front cockpit is a passenger cockpit. It's exactly at the center of gravity of the plane so it doesn't effect the balance."

"That's a good thing," I said.

"Would you like her to take you up?" Bruno Schreck asked.

"No."

You sure?" He had this odd smile on his face. His eyes sparkled.

"Yes."

"How about if we just close the bubble cockpit?" he asked. "You comfortable?"

"Yes."

"Let's open it up again and put a flying cap on him," he said.

It was not hard to notice he was referring to me in the third person. The bubble opened. A leather cap with embedded earphones and a microphone were placed on my head. Then they closed the bubble again.

"There you are," Schreck said. "You sure you don't want Birdie to take you up? She'd be real easy with you. I promise."

"No thank you," I said.

"What? Open the bubble again."

I was recalling a time twenty years ago when some people had opened a parasailing business on Mecox Beach. I still shiver when I think about this. They got me down there. They got me to sit on this little wooden plank suspended by rope from a kite overhead and they told me to hold on.

"I am deathly afraid of heights," I told them. "It's okay if I sit on this, but..."

"We'll just take you up maybe six feet," the owner said. "Biff? Send him up!"

It was just so horrible. I can hardly write about it. There I was, sitting on a plank two hundred feet up in the air, with no seatbelt or harness, grasping the ropes on either side with my hands, screaming get me down, get me down and they're laughing and laughing. I was that close to sliding off and falling down onto the sand and dying. Even today, writing about this sends shivers through me. I'll be right back.

Okay. I'm back. But I can't write about that anymore. So they got me down. "That wasn't so bad was it?" they asked.

So they took this picture of me in the cockpit. So I got out of this one. It was a close call.

But Schreck was not done. The next day I got an email from him. "In case you change your mind about taking a ride, just call me," he wrote. He gave me his number in the email. "They could do it tomorrow afternoon."

I wrote back, "Maybe my son would be interested in this." I gave him David's email and phone number.

The next day, he wrote again. What is wrong with these people?

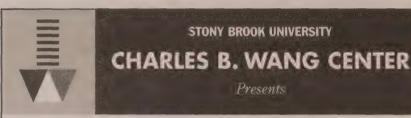

"Birdie and her husband Ed have agreed that if you want to go up anytime before they leave the area after this weekend, just give them a call. So here's their number." And so he left that, too.

That night, David and his girlfriend Erika were at my house. They cooked.

"I thought you might like to ride in a stunt plane," I said.

"I've already been in touch with them. We're going up tomorrow," he said, very nonchalantly. "You want a lot of lamb stew or a little?"

So that was last night. Anybody seen David today?

Saving a Church

Three Plans for the Historic 1836 Methodist Church in Sag Harbor

By Dan Rattiner

About six months ago, the Reverend Tom McLeod of the United Methodist Church in Sag Harbor gave in. The number of parishioners had dwindled to just forty people, the coffers were insufficient to continue for much longer and the classic old stained glass church on Madison Street was falling into disrepair.

The main asset the congregation still had, of course, was the old three-story wooden church itself. And now there was an offer for it. Dennis Suskind, a former Town Councilman and a former partner at Goldman Sachs, was offering $2.9 million. Suskind had the financial clout to restore it, could have the money readily available and could even lend the church money to move to another site. Suskind said he intended to make use of the 10,000 square foot building as his private home.

The Reverend thought about it for a while. He consulted members of the congregation. $2.9 million was a whole lot of money. In very short order the Reverend became committed to this deal. He and the congregation would buy the property across from the old Rowe Industries building on the Bridgehampton Sag Harbor Turnpike at Carroll Street — it is a recently cleaned up superfund site. He would build an inexpensive metal butler building, in keeping with the more modest needs of the reduced congregation. There would even be money left over to endow the congregation for the years to come.

There are many old wooden churches in Sag Harbor as there are in many of the other colonial towns here on the East End. And there is a modest history of buyers coming in, converting them for residential use while respecting their original architecture. But there are no guarantees about that. Once a church is sold village needs assurances that if it is sold, both its exterior and its interior will be kept as is so that someday it could be returned to use for worship. So far, in this case, no such assurances are forthcoming.

has a white clapboard exterior. It is one of just six houses of worship located in the historic downtown of Sag Harbor, just a short walk from everything. And it seems clear that the

In any case, the contracts have been signed.

And the completion of the sale is dependent on a vote by the congregants, expected in a month, and by the Village itself, which has a law that says the sale of any property in the historic district needs to have Village Board approval.

And so, in this interval, people have begun thinking and talking about the upcoming sale and what other possibilities might be put forward.

There are two new ones.

The first is that the Village Board condemn the church and buy it themselves for its appraised value by using money raised from the real estate transfer tax it collects. This money is earmarked for land and historic building preservation and this situation would seem to be a proper use of it. In any case, the Village has begun considering this, and at a and enters the real estate tax arena in a town, new owners are free to do anything they want with it. If they wish, they could tear a church down.

As for this church, it is a major architectural masterpiece, designed by Ephraim Byram and built in 1836 during the height of the whaling era. Besides the stained glass, its roof features a classic campanile bell tower and steeple. It meeting about a month ago ordered appraisers to come in and give them an estimate of what it would take for them to buy the property. The report of the appraiser is expected before the end of this month.

Incidentally, the Village thinks the church could be turned into a community center and meeting hall. Such buildings are now becoming common in our East End towns. Montauk has one. East Hampton has one at the firehouse. Bridgehampton has one on Main Street across from the Candy Kitchen. (The town purchased the Bridgehampton building during the tenure of Dennis Suskind,) Wainscott has one and Water Mill has one. Sag Harbor does not have

The second proposal comes as a suggestion from a Wall Street Hedge Fund Manager named Adam Sender. He has a fine art collection worth in excess of $100 million. And he is offering to turn the church into a museum for the display of this work. The work, by artists such as Keith Haring, Matthew Barney, Ed Ruscha and Andres Serrano, would be displayed on the second and third floors. The first floor would be used as a Town Meeting Hall.

At this point, it is fair to say that however this plays out, there seems a high likelihood that this old church building will be saved. Years ago, certain historic buildings in our towns were lost to developers because there was neither the means nor the will to save them. This is no longer the case, a fact we owe to the infusion of vast amounts of wealth into our communities. largely from Wall Street, and to the wisdom of our public officials in creating the means to use parts of it for the public good.

Interestingly, Suskind is hardly insensitive to this situation. Indeed, one of the great accomplishments of his tenure on the Town Board was arranging the purchase of the four square pillared mansion located right by the monument in the center of downtown Bridgehampton. Before he came into office, this house was in major disrepair, with the owners of it living inside in awful circumstances, supported largely by the income from a gasoline service station they had built and leased on their front lawn. Their situation had been in place for fifty years. And no one could do anything about it.

Suskind did, and the gas station is cleared, the exterior and interior of the main house secured and plans are moving forward to have it be a museum recreation of a farmhouse, with the six acres surrounding it a working farm, complete with livestock, farm fields and gardens. The main house itself will be the museum. This project, arranged as a purchase by Southampton Town, is among the many of Suskind's accomplishments.

In Sag Harbor, an activist named Liz Joyce should be mentioned. Pressing hard to get this church saved, she has met with the Mayor, Mr. Suskind, Mr. Sender, the Rev. McLeod and has taken the lead, much as Brenda Scheider took the lead in saving the Sag Harbor Theatre sign three years ago, in demanding the saving of the church of the United Methodist Church of Sag Harbor for generations to come.

Rower Wanted

Must Be Free to Take December Off to Row to the New World

By T.J. Clemente

Are you interested in taking a little time off from work to row across the Atlantic Ocean? If you are, Roy Finlay, helped by his wife Colleen, has been planning such a voyage for himself and three others, and is now short one individual. Roy, 52 years old, has already signed on 53-year-old Chris Cuddihy of Riverhead and 32-year-old Denis Richardson of Shelter Island. That leaves him one crew member short and he is actively seeking the fourth.

The voyage is to be done in a sort of multihull rowboat designed with two water makers to keep the crew hydrated for the long journey that is expected to take at minimum one month. The crew will eat dehydrated food and still needs to work through some potential issues such as how to stay warm on ORCA (the name of the rowboat, which stands for Ocean Rowing Challenge America). The world record for rowing across the Atlantic is held by a French crew that rowed a vessel named "La Mondiale" in 1992 from the Canary Islands to Martinique in 35 days, 8 hours and 30 minutes. On December 15th, La Mondiale and her crew will be defending their record. And then there is ORCA and its proposed crew of 4, who will compete as the underdog. But hey, you never know.

ORCA was designed by Finlay, Richardson and Cuddihy and built at Haps Ironworks Gallery on Shelter Island. The secret to the design is the power to weight ratio — keeping the amount of how much weight each rower will be pulling very low. The plan is to have each man pull less weight than the larger crews on the larger boats. However, the risk is that in a crew of four there is no margin for error. They need everybody to stay healthy in order to maintain the average speed of three and a half knots with the oars never stopping. And there will be no chase boat following this crew like the others will have.

HAMPTON TRADITION VI — SIP N' SODA

By T.J. Clemente

When you enter Sip N' Soda, located at 40 Hampton Road in Southampton, you go back in time. There is in an old-fashioned payphone booth, the same soda fountain counter since the place opened in 1958, and always a member of the Parash family greeting many of their long time clientele by name. But most importantly, there is the best homemade ice cream in Southampton.

Open seven days a week from 7:30 a.m. to 5 p.m., the luncheonette was established by William and Nicoleta Parash in 1958, the very same William Parash who opened and operated the Candy Kitchen in Bridgehampton until he sold it in 1945. Grandson Paul Parash smiled when he explained how his grandfather used to make the famous ice cream. Today, they have seventeen flavors. Over the years, famous clientele has visited the luncheonette. Even Jackie Kennedy used to buy young John-John ice cream at the counter.

The slower pace while enjoying a hamburger, fries and milkshake is like a scene right out of the television series "Happy Days." A meal at Sip N' Soda is not just nostalgic — it is also delicious. The Parash family is proud of their tradition of serving their clientele year round for 49 years. Some customers stop in and say "the usual" and get their lunch prepared just the way they want it, maybe followed by a scoop of their favorite ice cream without ever looking at the menu. However, for those who aren't familiar with the menu, they offer many breakfast and lunch items at affordable prices. They even offer peanut butter and jelly sandwiches for the young children who crave them.

The 1,500 sq. ft. luncheonette oozes Southampton history. High School dates, kids celebrating birthdays or a quick stop on a hot summer day are something most locals have experienced there. Celebrities, socialites and regulars alike come to the small town soda shop to get a fix of small town life that so many fear is disappearing in the Hamptons. Sip N' Soda is a tradition that is in strong hands and thriving. The smell of the burgers sizzling on the grill, with the sound of the malt machine turning makes you smile.

The Parash family is deep into the third generation of ownership. Founder William Parash's son Jim and grandson Paul bus tables, take orders, help grill the burgers, ring up sales, greet customers and make everybody feel at home.

I am not sure why a burger from the grill of a soda shop tastes so good, but it always does. It was at a place just like Sip N' Soda that I had my first hamburger platter when I was a young boy. And to sit at a counter on one of those turning stool seats to watch your favorite flavored milkshake, malt, ice cream soda or ice cream sundae be prepared is an old time feeling. The syrups they use on the ice cream are also homemade, as they have been since Parash's Candy Kitchen days.

Paul Parash behind the counter at Sip N' Soda

The reason I believe this family is still successful in this ever changing world is because the ice cream is just that good. Using fresh produce and local products is the formula that the Parash family has used since the beginning. Their professionalism is mixed with a small town, traditional way of making clients feel at home.

While interviewing for this story, I watched a six-year-old girl sit at the counter and eat chocolate ice cream out of an old-fashioned metal ice cream dish. Although there was more ice cream on her face than in the dish, she kept going. Her eyes wandered around Sip N' Soda, taking it all in. That is perhaps the essence of Sip N' Soda's tradition. Norman Rockwell could not have painted a better scene.

Upon leaving, an older couple entered the luncheonette. Paul Parash quickly ran from behind the counter, opened the door for this couple and greeted them by name. Perhaps they were long time customers, perhaps they were friends of his grandparents or perhaps they get the treatment everybody gets at Sip N' Soda. Old time courtesy with a smile.

Finlay is a retired Royal Navy Diver and Richardson has sailed around The Great Barrier Reef and surfed the massive waves in Hawaii. Cuddihy has worked lobster boats, Wyoming oil fields and has been a coast-tocoast big rig driver.

This is Finlay's second attempt to cross the Atlantic in a rowboat. Attempt number one was not successful because of equipment and crew issues. The crew came apart and the mission was aborted when the boat rowed into Cape Verde. This time, with a unified group, the crew's goals are simple — cross the ocean safely and try to win the race.

What they really need is a title sponsor to help with all the costs of such an enterprise. What they have is an iron will to seek out adventure, to overcome nature and to attain their goals. Reinhold Messner, the first man to climb all of the 8,000- meter peaks on Earth, once said, "In the end it is not conditioning, but the will that gets you to the top." These men have the will, but it is the elements, such as weather and ocean conditions, that are out of their control. The reason for the timing of the race has a plus and a minus. The plus is that by leaving in December, they will avoid hurricane season. However, the minus is that it will be a chilly row across the Atlantic.

In the last week ORCA was launched and it performed better than expected. This must be maintained for these men not to perish. The plan for the race is to ride the trade winds, which will be blowing fiercely.

Somewhere, Christopher Columbus must be smiling. After all, it was his strategy to ride those trade winds that brought his crew to the new world.

But ORCA's crew needs a fourth member, and, unlike a round of golf or a quick doubles tennis match, this fourth must be a special person. First, he must be able to take a month off from work. Secondly, he must be able to row long hours. Then, he must be able to eat dehydrated food for over a month and still perform at high levels. And lastly, he must be able to handle stress, cold, have the iron will to not let the reality of the unpredictable forces of nature deter him from overcoming the many odds that the crew will face while rowing from the Old World to the New World.

Is that person you?

Big Clam Crowned

Local Baymen Select Monster Clam in Amagansett Competition

By Victoria L. Cooper

The 17th annual Largest Clam Contest, sponsored by the East Hampton Town Trustees, took place this past Sunday, with clams entered from all the town harbors including Montauk Harbor, Accabonac Harbor, Three Mile Harbor and Napeague Harbor. East Hampton clammers have been searching these waters for the largest clam for two weekends and have reported their findings to four official "holding" sites: Wainscott's Seafood Shop, the Amagansett Seafood Store, Stuart's Fish Market (Amagansett) and Gosman's Fish Market (Montauk).

The festivities began at noon on the lawn of the Trustee's Building on Bluff Road in Amagansett with free samples of fresh, local clams on the half shell and tasty cocktail sauce. I couldn't resist their unsullied flavor and it's a good thing I didn't, since the 1,200 raw clams were all but gone in a record 45 minutes.

There on the Trustees' office lawn, many of the local old-timers were commenting that this year was the largest turnout they have ever witnessed and they were pleased that the greater community wanted to share in this fun tradition with them. With about 300 in attendance, long lines formed under the two blue and white tents on the lawn for a bowl of Bonac chowder. As I stood on line, it was obvious that most of the people there had some sort of life in the local fishing and shell fishing industry since their shirts and hats featured fish, clams and seafood emblems. After downing my bowl of salty Bonac clam chowder and topping it off with some oyster crackers, I was ready for the competitions to begin.

There was a "Guess the number of clams in the jar" contest and from the looks of the large Mason jar, I guessed 2007, hoping that they were honoring the year or something. After writing down all of my contact information, I looked down to my right and saw the biggest

FULL HAMPTON MARATHON CONTESTED THIS WEEKEND

By Christian McLean

We at Dan's Papers aren't new to the concept of an organized run in the Hamptons. In fact, it seems like we invented the idea, hosting the first Potatohampton 10k while most of our current readers were still learning to walk. And while we are very proud that our run is a staple of the summer, we'd like to extend a hearty welcome to a new race that goes the extra mile + actually an extra 20 miles — The Hampton Marathon. It's intense. It's demanding. The 26.2 miles through Springs, Amagansett, Napeague and back will push runners to their physical limits. Not since the Hurricane of 1938 has the Hamptons seen so many people running in the same direction. The race has been capped at 700 runners (with another 120 on a waiting list) and applications have been turned down for months already. It's roughly 500 more runners than expected. We're not making this one up. There will be no Ecuadorian eels or 4,000-pound goldfish competing this Saturday.

The most impressive stat is that while it sounds like it would take a crew of a hundred to organize such an event, it has been realized by an organizational staff of two. The fruit of Diane Weinberger and Amanda Moszkowski's efforts, the Hampton Marathon (along with the Half-Marathon and Kids Marathon) are all fundraising efforts to benefit Project Most an East Hampton-based organization that provides after school services for elementary and middle school children.

The marathon and half-marathon start at 8 a.m. from Springs School and head south along Accabonac Rd. Eventually the route turns east through the roads north of Amagansett Square, and when the half-marathon turns back toward Springs, the runners in it for the full 26.2 miles head out through Promised lobster that I have ever seen.

"Wow, how big is that guy?" I asked.

"She's 10 pounds," said Lynn Mendelman, one of the East Hampton Town Trustees in attendance.

"I don't think they even make pots big enough to cook something that size," a man behind me commented.

"Yes, it's a lot of lobster salad," she replied.

A three tickets for ten dollars raffle was offered for this larger than life lobster and S with the high prices of lobsters this past season in mind — near $40 for a pound of lobster salad — this chance was a real bargain. But before any of those contests began it was time for the "Best Chowder" contest to start. With fifteen entries, eight Manhattan and seven New England, the judges suited up with their Dixie cups and began to taste. The chowders were all different - some with bacon bits, some with spice, others with chunky vegetables and then some with just a creamy broth but all with clams. The chowder cooks stood eagerly around the table waiting for their chowders to be tasted. Around me, conversations and predictions ensued.

"I heard number eight is the one to beat. She won last year," a man said.

"Oh no, they wouldn't pick another Manhattan again. It's gotta be a New England this time around. Lucky number thirteen is the one to beat this year," a woman responded.

"Oh, yeah? Who made it?" the man asked.

"I did!" the woman said and smiled.

The judges had delighted expressions but would not announce the winner until the very

Other features of the Clam Contest included a slide show about local shell fishing history presented by officials from the East Hampton Town Shellfish Hatchery in Fort Pond Bay, Montauk. The presentation was held inside the Town Trustees' building and covered all the environmental factors that effect shellfish, offering solutions for what we can do to help preserve this unique treasure in the future. Led by Bay Management Specialist II Barley J. Dunne, observers asked many questions about the local harbors and certain policies and restrictions. Little scallops and clams in jars of water for children and adults to examine were also a part of the presentation as East Hampton Town Shellfish Hatchery employees were on hand to answer questions.

Many local politicians, such as County Legislator Jay Schneiderman and Town Supervisor Bill McGintee, as well as those hoping to get elected to the Town Board, such as Julia Prince, were in attendance and enjoying the merriment. Around 2 p.m. the time had come to measure the clams and weigh-in. This was done by a bayman with a ruler and another bayman with a scale. The numbers were called out and a secretary wrote them down. Sometimes there was a cheer. Then there would be a shout of, "Clam Up!" so the measurements of the next entry could be heard.

As they dealt with the 30 or more clams, the raffle was drawn for the big lobster and was awarded to Dawn Green of East Hampton. The Shellfish Hatchery workers counted the clams in the Mason jar and the exact number was 1,826, and the closest guess of 1,840 was made by Robin Conklin of East Hampton. Needless to say, I was off by 181 and he won a clam t-shirt. The winner of the "Best Clam Chowder" contest was number eleven, made by Jessica James of East Hampton.

In the biggest clam competition, each harbor was awarded a winner and a junior winner and, of course, there was the overall winner. In Montauk Harbor Henry Lohr won with a clam weighing in at 1.2 pounds. There was no junior winner in Montauk Harbor. In Accabonac Harbor the winner was Richard Pulisi with a clam weighing 1.2 pounds. The junior winner was year-old Jack Murphy with a .5-pound Academy Award-winning actress Renée Zellweger may exude glamour on and off the red carpet, but it was her endearing girl next door charm that America fell in love with over a decade ago, when Jerry Maguire "had her at hello." Since then, she has been on a professional winning streak and is now one of the highest paid actresses in Hollywood.

Born in Baytown, Texas in 1969, Zellweger was raised with her brother Drew in a suburb of Houston by their father Emil, a Swiss-born engineer, and mother Kjelfrid, a Norwegian-born nurse. During high school, she participated in gymnastics, cheerleading and the drama club, and was voted "best looking" in her class. After graduation, she attended the University of Texas at Austin where she studied English, but after taking an acting class to fulfill a requirement for her major, Zellwegger realized her passion.

After graduating college in 1991 with a Bachelor of Arts Degree, Zellweger pursued her acting career while residing in Houston. Her first jobs were in commercials and made-for-TV movies but soon thereafter, she landed roles in several hit comedies of the early 90s, including Reality Bites, Dazed and Confused and Empire Records. In 1994, she finally packed her bags and moved to Los Angeles to gain further acting experience.

Zellweger officially broke into Hollywood with her role as Dorothy Boyd in the comedydrama Jerry Maguire, playing Tom Cruise's love interest, a part she supposedly won over Winona Ryder, Mira Sorvino, Marisa Tomei and Bridget Fonda. The film received critical and commercial success, being nominated for five Oscars including Best Picture and grossing $154 million in the U.S. and an additional $120 million internationally. The movie gave Zellweger worldwide recognition and left audiences with memorable quotes such as "you complete me," "you had me at hello" and "show me the money."

Zellweger continued her success by taking roles in projects that ranged from small independent films to big-budget

Höllywood movies including notable performances in One True Thing, Nurse Betty, Me, Myself and Irene, White Oleander, Chicago, Cold Mountain and Cinderella Man. The actress also lent her voice to East Hampton resident Jerry Seinfeld's 2007 animated film

Jones, an outspoken British woman struggling with her weight, career and love life, in the 2001 box-office hit Bridget Jones' Diary. Zellweger gained 20 pounds and perfected an English accent for the role, which earned her an Oscar nomination for Best Actress in a Leading Role. Zellweger shed the extra pounds when filming was completed, but packed them back on again for the sequel Bridget Jones: The Edge of Reason, which was released in 2004 and earned her a Golden Globe nomination for Best Performance by an Actress in a Motion Picture. She once said, "People did suggest to me that it might not be necessary to gain as much weight as I did last time. But I thought the weight was essential in repeating the journey. If you're not going to be who she is, then what is the point?"

Throughout her career, the acclaimed actress has been nominated for almost 40 awards and in 2003, she won an Oscar and Golden Globe for Best Supporting Actress for her role in Cold Mountain. She has also received two additional Golden Globes for her performances in Nurse Betty and Chicago, and in 2005 she was given a star on the Hollywood Walk of Fame.

Zellweger's personal life has included a string of courtships with Hollywood hunks such as George Clooney and Luke Perry, but her first high-profile romance was with Me, Myself and Irene co-star Jim Carrey, a relationship she later poked fun at in 2001 while hosting

"Saturday Night Live." In 2002, she began a two-year relationship with Jack White, singer of The White Stripes, whom she met while filming Cold Mountain. However, what is perhaps Zellweger's most talked about relationship began in 2005 with country singer Kenny Chesney. The couple became front-page news when they wed in an impromptu ceremony, and again four months later when they filed for annulment. Zellweger cited fraud — a term she claimed was "simply legal language, not a reflection of Chesney's character."

Recently, the actress has been romantically linked to Amagansett resident Sir Paul McCartney, as the two were spotted together at the Tom Petty and the Heartbreakers Ross School concert, having dinner at the American Hotel in Sag Harbor and canoodling at a private party in East Hampton thrown by Jon Bon Jovi.

In 2003, Zellweger purchased a four-bedroom farmhouse on Egypt Lane in East Hampton, which was rated #10 this year on OK!

Magazine's list of top U.S. celebrity summer homes. According to the previous owner, furniture designer John Mascheroni, a ghost named Lillian who "loves to play tricks" haunts the home. When Zellweger isn't being spooked, she

This was by far one of the coolest experiences of my life. Bruno began to take his eyes off the air and started shooting pictures of Eddie and me. Then, Eddie did something insane. Without warning, he turned the plane completely upside down and suddenly my world was turned upside down. Blood started rushing to my head as I screamed at the top of my lungs over the radio. Eddie brought us back to normal and I begged him to let me know when he was going to do something like that again, so I could get it on video. After doing a couple of small stunts, like flying sideways and upside down, we got some amazing photos.

Then, we broke away from the formation. "You ready to do some real flying?" Eddie asked.

"What do you mean?

WHHOOOOEEEAAAAAHHHHHH #$%^##@@!!!"

Eddie banked the plane in a roll, then started flying up vertically. My face was being pressed towards the back of the plane, similar to the sensation you get when riding a roller coaster. Eddie pointed out Gardiner's Island. In his voice, you could feel his appreciation for the beauty of what we were looking at and from where we were looking at it. Then he pulled back on the stick.

Experiencing four G forces on your body inside a stunt plane right after having lunch at Golden Pear is always fun. My arms weren't strong enough to hold my camera up off of my lap against the power of the aircraft holding me down. When we got level, Eddie let me take control. "Just slam that stick to the left and watch what happens," he instructed.

"Wait, take my camera, I got to get this on video."

I pushed the stick over to the left and, like magic, the plane rolled left, then upside down, then right side up. I did my first roll in an airplane with Eddie and I have to say, it was pretty cool, however, I felt a little sick and I gave in, "Okay Eddie, I don't want to puke inside your plane here."

"Don't worry we're heading home."

Eddie expertly looped us back toward East Hampton airport. We sailed through the sky. I was a little green when we landed, but was filled with joy and found that the screaming was helping my bellyache.

When I got the pictures from Bruno, I couldn't wait to show them off to my friends.

Want to go for a ride like this and get pictures like this? Give Bruno a call at (917) 968-8401 and he'll set you up.

is often seen around town shopping at White's Pharmacy or having dinner at Nick & Toni's.

On October 13, Zellweger will serve as the Honorary Chair at the 3rd Annual Artist and Celebrity Birdhouse at the Southampton Cultural Center. The event includes an auction of birdhouses created by celebrities, designers, artists and professional athletes to benefit the South Fork Breast Health Coalition, a non-profit organization founded in 1994 by local artist Karyn Mannix to promote education about preventive measures and to support those undergoing breast cancer treatment and breast cancer survivors. Zellweger was quoted as saying, "The birdhouses are incredibly creative and well worth experiencing on this festive and inspiring evening."

With her Doris Day-like qualities and impeccable demonstration of diversity in her work, the vivacious Renée Zellweger has become one of America's sexiest sweethearts. And with a rumored Beatle by her side, we will surely be seeing more of the charming and seemingly down to earth actress here on the East End.

TWENTYSOMETHING. . . . By David Lion RATTINER

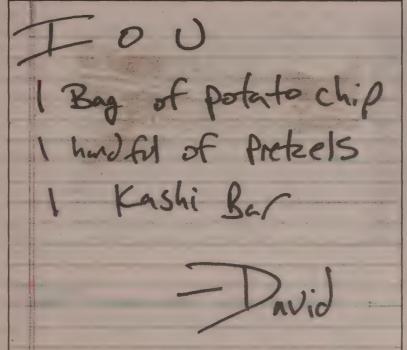

Stealing Food

Working at a newspaper opens you up to a lot of wonderful things. You always know what's going on around town, you get to hear a lot about local politics and news, and you don't have to do too much heavy lifting. That is unless you get stuck filling in for a "sick" delivery guy.

If there is one drawback, it is that you have to spend quite a bit of time in front of a computer to write articles, which means that you feel like snacking a lot, especially when your neighbor is Bob's Village Market in Bridgehampton. Wow, are those sandwiches good.

In an effort to live a healthier lifestyle, I have sworn to myself that I will not purchase cookies or bags of potato chips from next door and will only buy healthy lunches. The plan has been working. I have not been buying things like Doritos or Milano Cookies.

Unfortunately, the plan is not completely flawless, mainly because I just go to the Production Department and steal food directly off the desk of my friend and co-worker Genevieve, who always has the most delicious snacks stashed away. You know these people—the ones that can buy a box of cookies and just let it sit there for like three days and have one here and there. This is not me. I'll eat the whole box in six seconds.

I feel really bad about stealing from Genevieve, so much so that I don't do it secretly anymore. Instead, I leave an I.O.U. on her desk to let her know what I stole while she wasn't looking and how much money I have calculated that I owe her. I'm generally pretty fair about this, although it may take a while for me to pay up.

Genevieve has a hard time getting angry at me, mainly because I introduced her to the love of her life through my dating website www.datehampton.com. So when I see the anger in her eyes for taking a cookie, I remind her of that, very casually, of course. "You can't get mad at me! I introduced you to Jay!"

This is responded to with a very classic and comical frown. We're like a television show here at Dan's Papers. You got to see it to believe it sometimes.

I also, here at Dan's Papers, tend to give most people in the office a play-by-play of what is going on in my life. Most recently, it has been about the renovation of my bathroom, which I've done all on my own with no plumbing or construction experience to my name. It has been quite a ride.

I have to say, the renovation of my bathroom is one of the most amazing accomplishments I have ever done in my life and I think I have learned more about myself and about life in the last two weeks than my entire college career. Didn't know a half-Jewish guy could do a whole bathroom by himself did ya? Then again, I am half Irish and was half drunk when I got the idea to attack my bathroom on my own.

I was with Joel, better known as DJ Biggie de Black Rhino, the celebrity DJ of the Hamptons, and I was talking to him about how disgusting my bathroom was. "Why don't you just do it yourself?" he asked me.

And just like that, the two of us drove to Home Depot and I dropped about $1,000 on a new toilet, sink, vanity, bathtub, shower wall, paint, paint brushes, flooring and plumbing materials. Then, I drove to Montauk with a truck full of this stuff and went into my bathroom with a hammer and just started ripping everything out of it like a mad man. It was quite possibly the most liberating experience of my life. There is nothing like hauling an old toilet off a deck and watching it smash on the ground. Oh man it felt so good. If you are going to have somebody renovate your bathroom, help rip everything out. It is so gratifying. I can't even tell you.

I nearly broke down in tears when I realized that I bought the wrong sized tub and had to completely refit the drain using contact cement and PVC piping. I don't think I've ever been more focused in my entire life than when I was at Becker's Hardware in Montauk buying half-inch brass, male-to-male adapters. I pondered life as I mindlessly painted the walls white. I pondered how dangerous electricity is as I installed a new light fixture over the mirror. I actually did start crying when I was lying down on my back with the corner of the vanity digging into it, as I attempted over and over again to wrap Teflon tape around it to stop water from leaking.

I can't tell you how glorious it was when the sink worked and the toilet flushed, it was as if I had just discovered my inner-Spiderman powers. It was just an awesome feeling.

I'll admit that when it was all over and I screwed in the last screw and tightened the last nut, I grabbed my blanket from my bedroom, walked into the bathroom and slept on the floor snuggled up against the toilet.

Wait until they hear about this at work tomorrow.

And now, the town is once again entering boom years. More than 20 wineries and vine-yards are now on the North Fork and Riverhead is its shopping hub. The Hamptons has become a world gold coast on the South Fork. To the west, the suburbs have marched inexorably eastward.

Steve Tanger of Southampton and the Tanger Outlet Centers around the country was one of the first pioneers here. Although another pioneer developer Alfred Parr, had built a huge 10,000-seat trotter racetrack in Wading River in the late 1970s that failed after just ten days. But now Tanger got the idea that a giant shopping mall composed entirely of outlet stores would attract shoppers from western Long Island if it were built on the western outskirts of Riverhead adjacent to the LIE between the center of town and Grumman. He ultimately built two adjacent Tanger Centers with more than 100 stores here. And the people came in droves.

As a result of this, another group of developers bought property on the western outskirts of Riverhead and built Splish Splash, a theme park reproduction of a jungle water world, without the animals. It included a river, an artificial wave tank, waterfalls, water chutes and its own artificial beach.

At about the same time, the merchants of downtown Riverhead got the Town Board to agree to a massive downtown restoration project. It began with the opening of a hidden treasure, the downtown waterfront. Walkways and docks were built. Debris was cleared. Parkland was restored. A waterfall became a feature. And the Peconic River itself was cleaned up. Soon, there were kayakers on the river, festivals along the shoreline and, on occasion, tourist paddlewheel boats, performers and bands on the waterfront walkway. This set a new tone for the area. But it initially failed to bring more business to the town.

Then, just ten years ago, the Petrocelli family built the Atlantis Marine World Aquarium on Main Street. Inside, you walk alongside shark pools and fish tanks lined with giant boulders and stones that remind you of some sort of Egyptian ruin that Indiana Jones might explore. A part of the facility was set aside for sea mammal rescue services. The aquarium was a hit from the day it opened.

Now, finally, the stores of downtown Riverhead have begun to revive. Upscale restaurants have opened. The old Vail-Leavitt Opera House has been restored and is in use. The town movie house has had plans for restoration, though none have yet succeeded. Riverhead is stirring.

And now, the Town of Riverhead has hired a city planning firm known as Apollo to buy out some of the old abandoned stores in the center of town and build a great gateway that would visually lead strollers on Main Street down to the waterfront just a hundred yards away. It is a great idea, and though Apollo has been having trouble buying up the land, it should eventually succeed with a little condemnation help from the Village.

It appears, finally, that Riverhead is on the upswing. Apparently, it will be developed largely as Orlando, Florida was from a small county seat and agricultural center to the centerpiece of an area that is the largest theme park in the world.

But you know, Riverhead will never be another Hamptons. And it never will be a rural farming area such as the North Fork. In the end, I wouldn't be surprised if the Shinnecocks succeed in bringing a gambling casino into the mix there.

It will be what it will be. And it will be, if nothing else, a whole lot of fun for kids, parents and destination-minded people of all ages, with a big artificial mountain looming off in the distance next to the sunset.

Land and up to Lazy Point, then back to Springs School. With vistas of the sea, osprey, kitesurfers, dense woods and the occasional deer, the course embodies everything stunning about the Hamptons. "It really is a beautiful course," Diane said in a recent interview.

As a warning to drivers, the course won't be closed to cars, so if you're taking some of those winding roads to enjoy the autumn foliage, watch out for the runners. There will be some officers on the streets doing traffic control and runners being told to stay to the right, but even with 1,400 runners (total between the half and full marathons) there shouldn't be any problems. For those of you who live on the backstreets, getting out of your driveway may be difficult at certain times of day, but it's a small price to pay. Instead of leaving, put out a few folding chairs and watch the mighty race as it cruises by.

As you may know, marathons are nothing new to New York. A hundred or so miles west, New York City is gearing up for its very own marathon in November. Coveted as one of the most prestigious, the haul around NYC and its boroughs pulls in runners from the farthest reaches of the globe, with roughly 90,000 runners applying.

North of us in Boston, they have a marathon as well - the oldest annual marathon in the world — boasting 20,000 runners in 2007. Dan's Papers has a little known link to that race. If you search our archives, you'll find a few articles from the Away At School column detailing a young David Rattiner as he trained for the Beantown 26.2. His time was 5 hours 34 seconds. But the Boston Marathon has another connection to running and the East End aside from David's run. The Hampton Marathon has been given the go-ahead to be a Boston qualifier. This means that the Hamptons race and course have been sanctioned by the powers that be in Boston, and any runner who finishes this run under their qualifying time (check the chart on the Boston Marathon website) will be allowed to apply for A position in the Boston Marathon, run on April 21, 2008.

Sanctioning this event not only gives it another degree of validity in the world of running, but also draws serious runners to the Hamptons. While the majority of competitors come from the Long Island/NYC area, runners are also flying in from as far away as Florida, Texas, California and potentially Kenya (home of the top 4 male finishers in last year's Boston Marathon).

As I said, there's more than just a marathon going on, though. The half-marathon is being touted as the perfect tune-up for the NYC Marathon. To promote physical fitness in children, there is the Hampton Kids Marathon. It will allow children who have ran a cumulative 25.2 miles (12.6 miles for half-marathoners) over the several weeks and months leading up to September 29th to meet their goal of completing a full 26.2 mile marathon by running their last mile on the Hamptons course. Old Stone Highway will be closed for this race until the children have finished. So make a note of it

For a lot of us, the idea of running such a distance seems insane, but for those who can and those who do, marathons are the ultimate test of endurance, conditioning and mental toughness. That is, except for Alicia Barahona, who will be running two marathons (52.4 miles) this Saturday to raise awareness for breast cancer research. If you've got some time, watch these runners compete. Otherwise, stick to the main roads and the beaten paths.

The Sheltered Islander By Sally Flynn

Sheltered Islander #466 Monopoly

I just saw a commercial on TV for the new and improved Monopoly game. The big "improvement" is that they've gotten rid of the paper money and now have a little electronic debit card that they players swipe for paydays and fines.

Some things cannot be improved, like when Coca-Cola tried to replace their traditional coke with New Coke and, within a year, they went back to the original formula because of consumer demand. Some things just should not be changed, like the Monopoly game.

First of all, Monopoly is part of everyone and their mother's childhood. Monopoly references are part of our lexicon. Everybody knows that you don't want to land on Boardwalk unless you own it. Everyone knows, once in awhile, life will give you a "get out of jail free" card and you'd better hang onto it until you really need it.

Monopoly teaches us many life lessons. We learned how to take turns. We learned you'd better pay attention so you don't miss your turn—a lesson we all use when driving. We learned that it's nobody else's fault if you rolled three doubles and landed in jail. That taught us personal responsibility and to remember that if you got away with it twice, don't press your luck. You learned that winning a beauty contest is only worth $10 in real estate, but millions in advertising.

We learned the art of the deal when trading properties to build your empire. We learned about mortgages. And most importantly, we learned how to distract the banker with cookies so you can sneak over and grab your deed — also handy in real life. When you're at a real bank, bring cookies to your banker when discussing your mortgage or applying for a loan. Cookies laced with crushed Vicodan have always worked best for me. Your credit rating looks better with each consecutive cookie and after half a plate they'll approve your dog for a loan.

We learned how to negotiate, beg and cry on cue when we landed on Park Place or Boardwalk. And how many times have those begging and crying skills come in handy? For me, thousands of times.

We all learned about money denominations from Monopoly. We learned how to count, add, subtract and steal Monopoly money. This helped identify your money management style early in life.

Were you an obsessive compulsive who stacked all your money neatly and in order of denomination, with the ends tucked under the board just enough to secure the stack?

Did you have a big spender style with all the bills in one stack in sequence with the dark orange $500 dollar bill on the outside so it looked like you had a wad of big bills that you could peel off with panache?

Did you have a laissez-faire style with all the bills in one stack, but not in any particular order?

Were you showing your potential to be a homeless person with all your money scattered around and losing half of it on the floor?

Were you the future mafia boss who hid all the $100s and $500s under the $1s so the other players thought you had less than you actually did?

With the new debit machine monopoly, all these important money skills will be lost. All the revelations about your true personality will be lost. Plus the game will need batteries!

Some things just need to be left alone. What's next, electronic scrabble?

Dan's BOOK REVIEW: The Manny by Holly Peterson

By Kelly O'Reilly

Holly Peterson's debut novel The Manny takes the reader through a delightful whirlwind tour of the ridiculous riches of the Upper East Side and specifically one woman's life as a mother of three with a power-hungry husband and a part-time job as a network news producer. Then, in pops the woman's Manny and the reader is instantly hooked. For those not familiar with the modern childcare dynamics, a manny is a nanny of the male persuasion.

many wasn't hot, and the character Peter Bailey is just that. The mother, Jamie Whitfield, is a Midwestern-born transplant in the glittering web of old and new money on the Upper East Side. When her eldest son Dylan turns nine years old, he struggles with his father's absence and the lousy examples of good male behavior he sets when around. Desperate to apply her meticulous production skills to her son's deteriorating spirit and perhaps inject some good male behavior into her own life, Jamie hatches a plan to hire a Manny and serendipitously meets an engaging

Strong and down to earth, Jamie stumbles at times into doormat territory in the face of her lawyer husband's borderline abusive fits about orange juice pulp or repairs to his squash racket. Although Peterson nails the pampered husband from morning meltdowns to below-the-belt, marriage-shaking insults, Jamie backs down when she shouldn't, and even she knows it.

In spite of it all, Jamie is a lovable gal and The Manny is a foray into fantasy that you'll soar through with the greatest of ease. Peterson awards delicious detail to society life, painting pretty pictures of table settings, outfits, accessories, Park Avenue apartments and, of course, Whaling town turned big box business battlefield Sag Harbor took some time off from fighting a proposed CVS to throw itself a birthday party this past weekend. The threeday fete kicked off with the 12th Annual Lobster Bake to Benefit the Sag Harbor Whaling and Historical Museum, featuring singer/songwriter Caroline Doctorow. The following day saw the 12-meter America's Cup Yacht Race on the bay, featuring sleek ships competing with one another. FREE CENTRAL AIR-CONDITIONING FOR 1 YR.

PURCHASE FURNACE AT 1/2 PRICE AS SUMMER WINDS DOWN

LOCAL CONTRACTOR REVEALS WHAT OTHERS REFUSE TO TELL

Most anyone in business has their busy and slow times, The heating and air-conditioning industry is no different, and fluctuates dramatically with season and weather. Like now the fall weather is too mild for either A/C or heating. This is literally how it works. When we get to peak hot or cold seasons two things happen 1) our sales and service staff have more work than we can handle, 2) The demand is so high; there is no reason to discount the price.

In the off-season the a/c and heating business slows down to the point where our installers are sitting around without much work. Many companies lay people off in these slow times and hope to replace their skilled workers when business picks up. This is not a good business practice and is unfair to the employees and their families.

Other Dealers have refused to compromise and let the public know this, but at Flanders's we value our skilled workers greatly and would rather keep them busy, even if it means making little or no money. To do this, I'm going to slash the price of our first rate A/C and Heating Systems.

Here's my offer:

Purchase a Premier Central Heating & Air-Conditioning System (furnace and a/c) and I'll Give you a high efficient furnace at 1/2 the normal price. Plus take one year to pay for the system W.A.C (with approved credit)

If you need only an A/C or Furnace, I'll still give you a discount off the cost of the equipment plus guarantee at least 25% energy savings or I'll pay you double the difference of any unrealized savings during the firs year.

You see, September through November is a slower time of the year for my company. With Back to school expenses and last minute summer vacations coupled with the fact that summer is over & winter isn't started yet, folks are putting off buying A/C till next year. It's also not cold enough for the heating season to start or do furnace replacements. So by helping us now we'll pass big savings on to help you, a true win, win.

With your new Air-Conditioner and/or Furnace, we will go the extra mile to give you up to 10 years Parts and Labor warranty against any future repair bills. That's a full

Free for 1 Year; As I stated earlier you'll not have to pay for this system for up to a year with our 360 day No Payment and No Interest. You see while most folks are waiting till next year to purchase a/c you'll get to enjoy a/c though the remaining of the hot times in comfort and lock in 2007 pricing, all while not having to pay anything till 2008. Not to mention getting a more efficient furnace before winter gets here, you'll start saving real energy dollars right away.

Here's my offer: Summary:

- Purchase a Premier A/C system and get a hi-efficient furnace at 1/2 price.
- Guarantee 25% energy savings
- Don't pay till Summer 2007
- Repair free Warranty for up to 10 Years
- The best in quality and efficiency.
 - 1 Yr. No Interest No Payment.

Plus all our systems are covered by our Exclusive 365 day 100% Unconditional Satisfaction Money Back Guarantee.

So call Flanders Heating & A/C. Today for your free no obligation survey at 631-727-2760 (Monday - Friday 8:00am - 5:00pm)

This offer expires November 30th, 2007 or after we fill 37 installation slots, whichever comes first. At that time our schedule will be full and the savings will go away.

Early Bird Special: If you're one of the first 10 people to call, we'll include a Free Accessory with the purchase of a Heating & A/C system, a $650 value.

Pregnant news anchor Campbell Brown and her political strategist husband Dan Senor have gone to contract on a Hamptons home. The power couple is close to purchasing a three-bedroom, two-bath contemporary on a manicured half-acre with a pond in a private North Haven community. The sevenroom, 2,700-square-foot house includes a gourmet kitchen, a master bedroom with a sitting area, a wood-burning fireplace and a hot tub overlooking the yard. It is two doors down from Jon Stewart's home and around the corner from Edie Falco. Bench (continued from page 16)

Braveman, who is the President of the Alumni Association. Alan expressed astonishment. He went to look for it and found her claim was true. The bench was gone.

"They can't do this," he told Mrs. Gronlund. "LIU has nothing to do with this bench dedicated to your daughter. It's our bench. We paid for it. LIU didn't pay a dime and we never gave it to them. We'll get it back."

But the Alumni Association could not get it back. LIU said that the bench was at their Brookville Campus eighty miles to the west of Southampton. And now it was theirs.

Outraged, Braveman wrote articles about this offense for this newspaper. It didn't do any good. All LIU would say was that they were not about to give away school property. They weren't interested in hearing that the bench wasn't theirs. That was a technicality.

"This is off the record," Alan said (though he gave me permission later to write this), "but at one point the Alumni Association did seriously consider stealing the bench back. We sent a volunteer to Brookville to try to locate it before we went over there. He came back to say that he couldn't find the bench anywhere. So we never took this thought any further."

In 2006, LIU sold their Southampton campus to New York State for approximately $35 million. New York State has now opened a new college called SUNY Stony Brook Southampton. It is now in the second semester of its existence. And it appears that it is going to be very successful.

In these circumstances, the Alumni Association took up another collection from the alumni and once again bought a bench as a

This Sunday, September 30 at 10 a.m., the dedication of this bench will take place not at the college campus, but in the Linda Gronlund Memorial Nature Preserve off Bridgehampton/Sag Turnpike. Mrs. Gronlund wants no repeat of what happened at LIU Southampton, even after assurances that the insensitivity of what happened there would never happen with the more enlightened SUNY Stonybrook Southampton College. And who could blame her?

The bench also bears a plague to the memory Christopher Racaniello, Southampton College alumni who died in 9/11 while at work for the law firm of Dancer Fitzgerald Cantor in the south tower.

North Fork Vodka Country

With Wine Business Thriving, NF Entrepreneurs See Opportunity With Vodka

By Henry J. Salmaggi

Crushed grapes? Not for these guys.

Two childhood friends from Kings Park are bottling Vodka in the heart of Long Island wine country. Richard Stabile and his partner Daniel Pollicino are in the process of converting an old Baiting Hollow potato barn into a vodka distillery

The company is called Long Island Spirits. They will be the first to make handcrafted vodka using ingredients that include Long Island growN potatoes. Their first product, LiV(rhymes with five) Vodka.

During a recent tour of the gutted potato barn on Sound Avenue, Rich said the idea behind LiV was spawned in part by his passion for wine and spirits. Growing up in an Italian household, Rich told me he has fond memories of making wine with his grandfather in the basement of their family's Brooklyn home. Stabile spent most of his summers vacationing in Nassau Point. Since then he's felt a strong bond to the North Fork. He says the passage of a recent state-law now allows spirits to be distilled on the Long Island. That's when he told his lifelong buddy Dan about LiV and things started brewing.

From start to finish Stabile says it takes about two weeks to turn a spud into vodka. That said they hope to pump out anywhere from 5,000 to 8,000 cases of ultra premium vodka a year. The bottles will run you around $36 for 750 ml and about $42 for a liter. Their future plans include a tasting room overlooking part of an 80-acre potato farm, similar to what you would find at local vineyards. They will also offer tours so you can actually watch how the vodka is made. Rich says when they get things up and running smoothly they hope to dabble in flavored vodkas.

Riverhead Town Supervisor Phil Cardinale says he's delighted to welcome Long Island Spirits. He says the "distillery is a great addition to the thriving agri-tourism industry, which stimulates and supports our local economy and local environment."

So what are North Fork locals saying about the soon to be distillery? "Long Island found a new way to serve their spuds, we're looking forward to supporting another local industry," said Barney Pelan, the bar manager at Claudios Restaurant in Greenport. Veteran vodka consumer and local barkeep Scotty Hollid of Southold can't wait. Scotty says he can't believe local potatoes will soon taste even better than French Fries.

Now the information you've been waiting for, when can you expect to order your first dirty LiV martini – or Liv Ice Tea? Rich and Dan hope to have bottles of LiV on store shelves and in local restaurants by this winter. So there could be Long Island vodka available for Valentine's Day, what a gift! If you want to check out some more information on LiV or to know what is happening down at the distillery, check it out .

Early 2007 Vintage Reports

The 2007 grape harvest is upon us and all of these sunny, warm days have vineyard managers and winemakers optimistic that 2007 could be a terrific year for Long Island wines.

Of course, most that I've talked to are smart enough to curb that optimism with this reality — heavy rains, like we experienced in 2005 — could have a devastating effect. You probably remember those rains if you were on the East End during that eight-day period when up to 20 inches fell on local farms of all kinds.

Still, there's reason to be excited about the 2007 vintage, even if harvest isn't in full swing yet. To this point, all of the grapes for sparkling wine have been harvested along with many whites. Ben Sisson, vineyard manager at McCall Vineyard in Cutchogue has also pulled in the pinot noir at that vineyard. "We spent the past week picking Pinot Noir for still wine.....and I have to say I was very pleased indeed. Flavor development was superb. Pinot Noir is notorious for rot problems caused by its thin skin and tightly packed clusters, but luckily we avoided any, a testament to the wonderful growing conditions we had this year."

When I asked David Page, from Shinn Estate Vineyards in Southold, about their harvest, he echoed Sisson's praise for the weather. He told me in an email "The best and most important thing that we can say about the harvest is that the sun is still shining, giving us the heat we need to ripen our fruit. We will take as much of this weather as we can get. So far we have harvested chardonnay for sparkling and Anthony, Barbara and myself are all quite pleased with what we have in the tank. Good acidity. Clean fruit."

He also added that "Sauvignon Blanc and Semillon should come in within a few days. The flavors that we are tasting from the fruit on the vine are ripe and showing bright citrus notes and some tropical undertones with just enough basil and thyme to keep it interesting. But of course we need to get it in the tank before we can make wine."

There's that cautious optimism again, but others, like Peconic Bay Winery's Matt Gilles are already calling the 2007 vintage a potentially classic one, "You know I'll bring the rains in by saying this, but I don't think I've seen more potential in a vintage in my near 30 years here. Even a bit of nasty weather will have a hard time eradicating the benefits of this prolonged dry spell and this wonderful stretch of clear, crisp weather with only a few rain events in the past couple of months."

When I asked local vineyard managers and winemakers if the 2007 growing season reminded them of any from the past, I got — expectedly — an array of answers

Page declined to compare, saying "Each year as our fruit gets close to full ripeness we are astonished by the uniqueness of vintages here on Long Island. 2007 will be no different." But Kareem Massoud of Paumanok Vineyards told me that "I wasn't here for the full growing season in 88, 93 or 95, but I believe my father mentioned it reminded him of 88." Richard Olsen-Harbich, winemaker at Raphael in Peconic compares it to 1997 "......from all the clear blue skies and dry, low humidity days we've had all summer." But he was quick to add "But, it's not over yet and we still have to bring in our closer and get the final out ... until then, I'll take it one day at a time.

So, it sounds like this could be one hell of a year for Long Island wine, but as with any other year, wineries are at Mother Nature's mercy. Richie Pisacano, who manages vineyards both at Roanoke Vineyards and Wolffer Estate, describes 2007 most concisely "Lots of sun, a little rain, plenty of heat, only a few birds, and just the occasional drunken raccoon — makes for a happy me. Unfortunately, my curse as a wine grower is that I can't say it's a great vintage until everything is over. So let's talk over the holidays ... 2009."

Do We Need This Law?

New State Music Law Doesn't Apply To Our Musicians, They Are Just Too Good

By Phyllis Lombardi

Funny. I always thought music was one of the last truths around. Mr. Eliot Spitzer, has signed a new law for New York – a Truth in Music law. So tell me, do we need that law on the North Fork?

It seems that there are some musical "fakers" around this state. They illegally impersonate groups they're not associated with. For example, you think you're hiring Paul's orchestra for your daughter's wedding bash and what you get is a group of novice musicians with a chubby, bald guy as conductor. With this new law, those sour musicians could be fined up to $15,000. But I really don't think there's a problem with truth in music on the North Fork. We're pretty honest around here. And our music people are so uniquely talented that there'd be no way to impersonate them.

I'm starting with a personal experience. A few years back I decided to take some brush-up piano lessons (I hadn't taken a lesson since I was 18). Obviously many years had passed since I sat down at a piano with a teacher beside me.

Now the teacher I went to was New Suffolk's Patsy Rogers. And I tell you nobody could ever impersonate Patsy. She played the piano beautifully, of course, but her teaching was inspired. "You can do it, Phyllis" she'd say and most often she was right. I could memorize music — something I'd avoided since childhood. And why memorize? Because it frees you from the printed page, said Patsy. Makes sense.

Patsy composes music, too. Her work has been performed all over the North Fork. Certainly Patsy's one versatile musician who's in no danger of being impersonated

She's one of a kind!

Now out in Greenport High School a month or so ago there came a guy surely impersonator-free. He was visiting from Shelter Island as he has done before. You may recognize his name. Itzhak Perlman. Mr. Perlman heads up the Perlman Music Program on Shelter Island. That program instructs young musicians (ages 12-18) from all over the United States as well as other countries — Sweden, Russia, and Romania, for example.

Well, the young people presented a program at the high school, a program for string instruments, but more than a program. It was a song of self given freely to the audience. Their music remains in our hearts.

In Greenport, too, is another whose spirit and music abides. I trumpet Colin Van Tuyl who for years has played in and directed the Greenport Band. He's a part of the North Fork Chorale and has gracenoted so many of our North Fork musicals and holiday celebrations. Thank you, Colin.

This next North Fork music person lives in Mattituck. She also works there, by day. But on weekends and nights, Lauren Sisson sings. And oh, so well. She's given many concerts on our fork, solo concerts, and sometimes in a quartet.

Lauren's poise and personality defy impersonation. But it is her voice we come to praise here. Lauren will sing Broadway show tunes, or German leider, or whatever. All impeccable, all beautiful.

Like to hear Lauren – and soon? Then go see "The Music Man" presented by Riverhead Faculty/Community Theatre in November. Lauren will sing her heart out in the role of Marian, the librarian.

And while we're in Riverhead, let's listen to the No Doubt World Famous Monday Night Band. For whatever reason, these musicians do their thing on Sunday afternoons at Pulaski Street School.

Their thing? Singable selections by Harold Arlen and Richard Rogers. Or foot-tapping, flag-waving John Philip Sousa marches. How the audiences respond! With tremendous applause, even more joy and love.

From outdoor concerts, to string quartets on a Sunday afternoon, to jazz bands in a local high school, to a kid struggling with some scales on an old porch piano — our North Fork is alive with the sound of music.

Those Little Changes

North Fork Changes That Don't Go Unnoticed

Everything changes. The weather, of course, possibly your waistline, probably your ability to hike uphill.

And changes aren't necessarily resented. Often, in fact, they're welcome. Who does not, for example, savor the cool of an autumn morning after a steamy summer? And if you walk uphill slowly now? Well, the better to see things.

These thoughts came over the past few weeks weeks when I realized how even ordinary words in my life have changed. Simple words. Like staples, scoot, Staples, for so many years, were little metal things that brought order into my home. Income tax papers, stapled together, made me feel prepared to meet the IRS head-on. Or stapled lists of stuff to take on camping trips (always we took too much).

Scoot. Now there was a word to describe what little kids did when at play in a North Fork park. A pleasure to watch as they darted from swing to see-saw.

Finally, seasoning. Sure, I like garlic and cinnamon, though the seasonings in my grandma's sauerbraten do it for me. Every time.

But then, unexpectedly, I spent some time in a hospital. Those staples? They're not so endearing when they're running up and down your abdomen.

Then just listen to that perky nurse tell you to "scoot your butt" back on the hospital bed. It ain't so easy and certainly no pleasure to watch.

Seasoning? My hospital's menu boasted food "seasoned for the patient's dining enjoyment." Well, this patient experienced a new seasoning - metallic. It was poured liberally into everything I ate - yogurt, chicken broth, skim milk,

I do not want to think of myself as a prima donna. I thought I could adjust to change. It was tough, believe

Did other North Forkers have similar experiences? Words changing meanings as folks and the North Fork moved on? I hoped so. My hospital musings wanted company.

So it was I found Richie Hanusch. This Cutchogue guy, not 50, I'm sure, and looking much younger, related a few-months-ago Sunday-afternoon experience that gave new meaning to the phrase "pitch in." Like any red-blooded American male, Richie thought baseball when he heard those words. Or maybe the signs on those trash baskets of years agp - Pitch In.

Things are different now. You see, Richie has two college-age daughters who love everything about the Peconic Bay, including kayaking. On that Sunday, the young women were out kayaking later than usual much later. Richie and his wife headed for the Cutchogue beach where their daughters set off from. Finally, Mom and Dad could wait no longer and they called Southold police. But not before "pitch in" received its new North Fork meaning. Richie said five or six people on the beach at the time (none of whom he knew) went out in their boats to search the bay. Everyone "pitched in" said Richie and he is grateful.

Happy ending. One of the girls had indeed fallen from the kayak, but the girls made it to safety on another Cutchogue beach

On North Fork dry land, we now have lots of limousines. For Jane Utz, of Southold, limousine is a word much changed in her lifetime. Jane grew up thinking wealthy folks arrived at weddings or art show openings, or, as she calls 'em, "la de dah" events, in those Now limo has a different meaning for Jane. You see, Jane works at Pugliese Vineyards in Cutchogue. Each weekend the limousines arrive at the vineyard, discharge dozens of visitors, not for "la de dah" but for tasting, entertainment (usually live music) and just plain fun.

Jane welcomes the visitors, of course, but wishes they were a bit more interested in how wine is made and why our North Fork is suited for grape-growing. (I'll let you in on a secret. Jane used to be a teacher and I just think she can't get it out of her sys-

Anyway, for Jane, limousine no longer means exclusive, but rather, North Fork routine.

Back a bit I said everything changes. I could be wrong. It may be that words like North Fork never change. Certainly its beauty remains, the cohesiveness of its people. Time and again, in centuries past till this very day, it seems North Fork means a handshake, help,

Over the past years while reviewing restaurants of all types, I have been fortunate to meet many wonderful people whose lives are totally involved with making their restaurant the best it can possibly be. In all that time I have never met anyone more devoted or enthusiastic than Frank Spatola, the owner/chef of Parto's on Main Street in Riverhead. Frank is Sicilian by birth and a talented mason as well as an expert cook. The brick and tile work and charming décor of this restaurant are all his creation. On our recent visit we were amazed to find that he has just built a beautiful street to the street of the str were amazed to find that he has just built a beautiful new stone staircase to open up the top floor of the restaurant and that now there is a well appointed upstairs room that can hold just under fifty people and is ideal for private parties and meetings of all types.

The main dining room is very comfortable, warm and atmospheric and you could well be in an Italian trattoria. You can spend a lot of time looking at all of the memorabilia around the room but you really should concentrate on the food choice because Frank consistently produces food of a very high quality for his patrons and over the past few years he has built up a good regular repeat clientele.

I have often talked about 'honest' food in my reviews and I remain committed to the thesis that where food is concerned, honesty really is the best policy. Frank shares these beliefs, which are also integral to the traditional Sicilian cuisine dating back centuries. For him and his compatriots, the more simple the food the better the result, as long as the ingredients are fresh and of the highest quality. If you have ever been fortunate enough to visit the beautiful island of Sicily you will know how seriously they take food there and the result is this unfussy cuisine brimming with fresh tastes

Pizzas here are classic, crisp crusts with wonderful sauce. Once before, I commented that I had never eaten better, even in Venice and again the pizza we started with was perfect. Just to show that he could even top this, Frank then sent out an eggplant dish that was absolutely incredible with a light texture and long deep tastes that really complemented the Pindar 2005 Cabernet Franc that he is just started stocking and which was recently judged the best red wine from New York State. The eggplant had just been sliced, lightly breaded and fried and topped with his home made tomato and basil sauce and with just a sprinkling of cheese to bring the whole dish to a perfect balance. Forget anything you may have tasted billed as eggplant parmigiana; this was a light elegant dish to really make you salivate.

Sicily was the home of pasta and the pasta here is always fresh and the fettuccine accompanied by his signature home made pesto sauce topped with moist large shrimp was another dish to really make you sit back and enjoy the work of a master. The same applied to Frank's version of veal saltimbocca. The veal was tender and tasty and was never swamped by the proscuitto or sauce and the excellent spinach complemented a totally well balanced dish.

Whatever you eat, the portions are very generous. Leaving space for dessert should be mandatory. Again, I have written before about the cannoli and tiramisu and they stay as wonderful and as seductive as ever. This time we also tasted something completely new to me. Cardoccio, dough fried and rolled and filled with super light ricotta made us try to find a little extra room to enjoy it and forget the calorie count!

Everything served here, apart from one or two desserts, is made from scratch, so diners should expect a little wait, as everything is cooked to order. Based on all of our visits, the end result is well worth waiting for.

Parto's is open seven days a week from 11 am till 10 pm (12 to 9 on Sunday). The menu is very extensive and the main problem is always one of choice. Prices are ultra reasonable with appetizers and salads from $5 to $7; pizzas from $11 to $22; main courses from $10.50 to $16.50 and desserts from $3.50 to $4.50. They have a small but well priced wine list that features a number of Long Island wineries as well as Italian wines and by the glass they are from $5.50 and bottles start at $18.

Parto's is a restaurant that can quickly become the place of choice to go to when your taste buds demand good, high quality traditional Italian cooking either for something simple or a full meal. You will come away filled not just with good food but also with good feelings from the friendly welcoming service that is also an integral part of the dining experience Frank sets out to give all of his customers.

TAKE A HIKE WITH KEN KINDLER

Cedar Point to Val Shaffner House

At a recent Southampton Trail Preservation Society meeting the board members discussed some new and exciting hiking routes for member hikes. One hike that was considered is a walk from Cedar Point County Park in East Hampton to the Val Schaffner House in Bridgehampton's Long Pond Greenbelt. This is a hike that symbolizes the ties between the two towns and their respective trails groups.

I decided to preview this hike with a friend. We left a car in a parking area near the Val Shaffner House and then drove to Alewive Landing where this walk begins. The (long) ramble took a little more than five hours. I'm not sure of the exact distance — I think it is about 11 miles.

Driving directions to the hike destination: turn right, north on Bridgehampton/Sag Harbor Turnpike (CR-79) for approximately 2 miles. Pass Scuttlehole Road on the left and immediately to the right, find a Nature Conservancy sign by a gated dirt driveway. The driveway is to the Val Schaffner House; it's on the east side of Bridgehampton/Sag Harbor Tpk. about 100 yards north of the Scuttlehole Road intersection. It is a .3mile, bumpy ride to the house. Before reaching the house, there is a small parking area on the right side of the driveway with a Nature Conservancy sign, and a split rail fence across the trailhead, blocking motorized traffic, but allowing easy access by foot. To drive to the starting point of the hike from the Val Shaffner House, take Bridgehampton Sag Harbor Turnpike north. Turn right on Jermaine Avenue, right on Madison, left on Clinton. Pass the High School to make a right on Henry Street (Route 114). Follow Rte. 114 past Barcelona Neck to turn left onto Swamp Road. Turn right onto Old

To begin the hike from Alewive Landing, head back up the road. Just before Terry Road look for a gate in the cyclone fence running along the left side of the road. Enter Cedar Point County Park through gate 3. Remember to close the gate behind you. The lack of trailhead signs and sparse blazing keeps the first section of the Northwest Path hidden. The rest of the trail is very well blazed, so if you don't see a blaze for a while, you will know to backtrack and find the turn you missed.

Start out walking parallel to Alewive Brook. There is an old NW Path triangle blaze, indicating that you may already be on the 6.5-mile NW Path.

The trail reaches an osprey nest and a bench facing out onto a panoramic view of brook and pond. A sharp right turn takes you back to Alewive Brook Road; the trail exits the County Park through gate 2. On the gate, some faded yellow-painted triangles assure the hiker that this is indeed the NW Path. The path follows Alewive Brook Road to the left crossing Scoy Run before turning right, to travel along the Run, then passing it again at the sluice where a well built bridge takes you across the run again. A less scenic, but more direct route is to the right on Alewive Brook Road 40 feet beyond the intersection with Terry's Trail on the left side, by the entrance to a residential community. Note the sign: "Grace Estate Originally Settled in 1672." It is a well-worn trail that meets up with the NW Path south of Scoy Run. At a "Y" intersection bear right back onto the path. At the next intersection, turn right onto the Paumanok Path heading west. Turning left will take you east on the PP a short distance to the trailhead by the School House plaque on Northwest Road. You will now be following the yellow triangles of the NW Path and the white rectangles of the PP.

The next major intersection is Five Corners, where you follow the blazes across Whalebone Landing Road. It is easy to take a wrong turn here, so be alert for white or yellow blazes. If you took Whalebone Landing to the right the trail would take you to Northwest Harbor where a walk north along the shoreline would provide you with a pleasant beach walk back to Alewive Landing.

Next week this 11-mile ramble continues.

Go Fish

Offshore fisherman must be praying to the right weather gods, because there were large catches of tuna, albacore, and marlin this past week. The ocean is teeming with large fish and marine life – baitfish, sea turtles and rays. Ed at Star Island Yacht Club and Marina, Montauk, says Pete Sullivan on his boat Blazer, fishing at the southwest corner of the Fishtails, caught a 260-pound big-eye tuna which took 90 minutes to reel in. Sullivan also caught seven albacore. All the fish were caught at night.

Reelaxation out of Star Island, trolling during the day at the Fishtails, caught four albacore up to 40 pounds each and four yellowfin tuna up to 81 pounds. John Hart of the yacht Wrecking Crew, with his son Roger, fished 30 miles east of the Fishtails and caught five yellowfin up to 80 pounds. A hammerhead shark swam by their bait and a large make shark jumped out of the water and hit the boat. Nick and Bob on the Seaduce, also fishing the Tails, had 10 yellowfin tuna up to 65 pounds, six albacore up to 55 pounds and eight mahi mahi up to ten pounds each.

The Sea Wolf, fishing east of the 'Tails, had five yellowfin up to 70 pounds and seven albacore up to 50 pounds and a 60-pound wahoo — but their catch-of-the-day was an estimated 1000-pound blue marlin. It was brought to the side of the boat and released.

Dennis at Westlake Fishing Marina, Montauk, had a boat fishing east of the 'Tails at night this past Monday which brought back 20 yellowfin tuna, 10 albacore and a 200-pound make shark.

East End Bait and Tackle, Hampton Bays, reports the reef off the Shinnecock Bay inlet has sea bass biting on fresh clams or squid. There are also blackfish, but they must be released until the season opens on October 1. In Shinnecock Bay and inlet, anglers are catching keeper-size striped bass at night on eels during the incoming/outgoing tides. Stripers are also at the Ponquogue Bridge biting on chummed clams.

Ken Morse of Tight Lines Tackle, Sag Harbor, says bluefish up to 12 pounds are at Jessup's Neck and striped bass are at the Race and the Ruins. (Ken is now offering a 20 percent discount on Lamiglas rods.) Harvey Bennett of Amagansett's Tackle Shop reports false albacore chasing pods of bait in Gardiner's Bay and at Cherry Harbor southwest of Gardiner's Island. One of Harvey's customers caught a 43-pound striped bass off Montauk Point, which had a huge skate in its stomach.

Linda at Jamesport Bait & Tackle says there are weakfish at Jessup's Neck and porgies at Roger's Rock and Horton Point. A client caught eight striped bass at night at Horton Point. Steve at Wego Fishing Station, Southold, reports big porgies caught off Fisher's Island and Plum Gut, and large striped bass biting on live eels at Horton Point. Steve also says there are bluefish and weakfish in the Peconic bays.

Surf fishing in Montauk, Paulie A. of Paulie's Tackle says bluefish are being caught at the ocean beaches and large striped bass are biting on snappers on the north side of Montauk Point. There is a three-day surf fishing competition from noon Friday through noon Sunday (Sept. 28-30) at Napeague State Park, sponsored by The Fisherman magazine and the Long Island State Park Region. Prizes are awarded for the largest striped bass and bluefish caught in the surf, on the beach, off a jetty, bank or pier. Entry fee is $15; register by calling (631) 321-3510.

DAN'S TRAVELS

FISH ON!

Last Friday at 12:30 p.m., a crowd of eager anglers gathered at the docks near Lenny's Restaurant in Montauk looking at what the Lazybone's morning run brought in, not to mention many hoped to find a spot on the afternoon fishing trip. The Lazybones has been in business since 1985, under the direction of Captain Mike Vegessi. He has been fishing and treading the Montauk waters since 1977. Originally drawn to Montauk for its surf, Vegessi was an apprentice under many well-known captains such as Doug McCabe of the Frances Anne, who was one of Montauk's first off-shore masters, and Captain George McTruck, owner of the Sportfisher.

Unlike other boats in Montauk that go for the full day, Veggesi began to operate half days, with flounder fishing in the spring, flukes in the summer and blues and bass fishing in the fall – and with the purchase of a new boat in 1997, a 55' Bruno & Stillman, fiberglass boat, the Lazybones legacy was born. And today it is one of Montauk's premiere fishing boats.

Overhead the sun was bright and the temperature skimmed just above 80 degrees – a perfect September day for fishing in Montauk. I was accompanied by fishing extraordinaire Peter Cooper and, after talking with Kathy Vegessi, we were ready to fish. The Lazybones is a family-run business and Kathy helps by selling the tickets and arranging the trips. Their daughters, Serena and Rebecca, run their own 35' Duffy named Ladybones, sailing from the Montauk, but on my trip, Rebecca was one of the two mates, the other being Danny Christman of Montauk.

After meeting Captain Mike Vegessi, who promised an exciting and choc-full-of-fish run, we were ready to take off. Danny Christman helped Peter and me set up

Victoria and Peter Cooper aboard the Lazybones in Montauk our dark and light blue rods, explaining that we were going to be diamond jigging for blue fish and striped bass

"You gotta' be enthusiastic and stay by the bottom. That's where all the action is!" Danny said.

Diamond jigging is a really fun way to fish and essentially, when you use a diamond jig lure, you sink your diamond jig to the bottom and must immediately reel up six or eight times and then drop it back down to the bottom again with the hope that a fish will bite.

As we left Montauk Harbor and came around the lighthouse, the offshore waters seemed as calm as a lake. After a few test runs with our rods, we set off a little further and watched as flocks of birds started to fly around crazily on the surface of the water. To anyone who is familiar with fishing, this means that fish are near. Beautiful, shiny bluefish glided on the top of the water and as Captain Vegessi sounded the horn for us to drop our jigs, he yelled out, "this one is a blitz, get ready, you'll all get bites!"

Fall blitzing is a term used when a school of fish is passing through and, as they near the surface, they appear as if they were boiling.

I felt a few tugs at the bottom of my line and as I reeled up, I thought I caught the big one. Maybe it was even a striped bass. But to my disappointment, it was only a mussel. "Hungry?" Peter asked me as he shook my line free of the bottom feeder. I may not have been so lucky but two men at the stern of the boat, "Indiana" and "Rich," who are regulars on the Lazybones, caught a bluefish every time they jigged. Danny and Rebecca explained they these guys were professionals and within two miles of their perfect jigging, blues and stripers flock. Alone, these men caught about twenty blue fish, each weighing a range from about 5 to 15 pounds.

As the day waned on, it seemed like all the fish were going to "Rich" and "Indiana," but Captain Vegessi promised Peter and me that we would be in luck if we just stayed enthusiastic. And with that, our rods bent and the fight was on. Danny was there to help motivate me to reel the fish in (Peter needed no assistance) and before I knew it, a glimmering bluefish made its way to the surface. We unhooked the lively fish and threw it back to the deep waters — a beautiful sight to see.

We made it back to the harbor and Peter and I were excited to take our bluefish home and live up to the Lazybones motto, "Bring your lunch, Catch your dinner." The hardworking and friendly crew of the Lazybones is happy to help book your fall fishing trip, call (631) 668-5671 and fish on!

EMBARRASS

If you are embarrassed by unsightly fungal toenails at the beach or while swimming at the pool, we can help you! A severe fungal infection is a serious medical condition, requiring treatment. This problem will gradually get worse and will not go away by itself. Fungal Toenails are contagious and should be treated promptly. Dr. Orlandi has treated this condition hundreds and hundreds of times. He trained and practiced in Manhattan (Yorkville) for over 10 years and is now practicing in Long Island (Babylon Village). We have guided hundreds of patients who thought they would never get rid of this problem to obtain dramatic improvements and often normal toenails following treatment of their fungal conditions. We often treat very severe cases with dramatic results. Every patient is different and your healing ability, age and severity of your condition are all factors that may influence your outcome. This is by far the most common problem that I see in my office. If you have this problem call us and we will help you!!

Fungal Toenails are unsightly and create a foul stench. Prompt treatment is important for your health.

We are located in beautiful Babylon Village directly South of Argyle Lake. We proudly serve Babylon Village and the surrounding areas with a brand new clean modern facility in a picturesque setting in an upscale community. Our facility has a large private parking lot for easy parking.

We Commonly Treat Severe Fungal Infections Of The Toenails.

this problem is contagious and should be treated promptly. I have seen many children infected most likely from their parents. This problem could have been completely avoided by prompt treatment. Also the fungus infection will spread from toenail to toenail. This can develop into a serious problem with severe fungal nails that are thickened, discolored and odiferous causing pain with secondary bacterial infection. Early treatment is important and is much easier to treat. Many patients have come in to ask about laser treatment of their foot problems. I received in-depth comprehensive training in Newport Beach, California on CO2 Lasers and their use in the treatment of common soft tissue problems (warts, fungal & ingrown

If you have fungal toenails you should be aware that fungal toenails) occurring of the foot. The tremendous benefits that laser treatment this problem is contagious and should be treated. could offer for your condition are many. As a surgeon my preference is to use the laser when possible. It is an advanced technology that reduces morbidity, usually eliminates hospitalization and provides better patient care. If you are a younger patient and are suffering from unsightly recalcitrant (hard to eliminate) fungal toenails, a minor surgery followed up with an application of antifungal medication directly to the nail bed may be used to help significantly reduce and may also help eliminate persistent fungal infections. Excellent results are commonly seen following treatment of this condition. Healthy clear toenails are a general indicator of good health and there is no more need to be embarrassed by unsightly fungal toenails. Fungal toenails are extremely difficult to eliminate and may require more than one treatment.

Wedding Suide

Save The Date

It's the big day and time to tie the knot because you are, "Gettin hitched!" We all have dreams about the details incorporated into our wedding. We dream of the person we will marry, how they will look, how we will look in our dress and the colors of our bridesmaid's dresses. We dream of the type of flowers that will decorate the sentimental building where we will wed. And when it comes time to live this dream, it takes a lot of work to accomplish. The "work" part is not often in our dream but equally essential. Wedding invitations are a crucial part of the process. They are the memorable first impression for loved invited to share in the special day. When shopping for the perfect invites we might wonder why there is so much packaging involved in these special announcements.

Before the printing press was invented, the town crier along with all the news of the day typically announced weddings in England. Everyone within earshot would attend. Only royalty had the discretion

The genuine mass market for wedding invitations emerged in 1798 with the invention of Lithography. The invitations were delivered by hand on horseback and due to the unreliability of the ancient postal system - they were placed in a double envelope for protection. Even though the mail is cleaner and more efficient today, we kept the tradition.

After the printing press was invented in 1447, the common people would announce their weddings in the newspaper, hence wedding announcements in the paper today.

With modern technology comes an abundance of choices in wedding invitations and reminders to reserve the date. Some of the hottest ideas to save the dates are magnets with personalized photos of you and your loved one. As part of the package at Magnet Street Weddings, you can choose a "save the date" photo booth magnet that displays your sweetheartstyle just like when you were kids making silly faces in the photo booth. Another "save the date" magnet includes three pictures of your choice along with three blocks for personalized writing. With these nice pictures people can see how special this event is going to

For those who are computer savvy and wish to be extra involved in the process, LCI Paper makes it possible to design and print your own professional invitations at home. The process is not necessarily cheaper but definitely more unique. There are different types of wedding software that you can purchase to make one of a kind invites. After making your design you choose the script and write it yourself. There are specific outlines that guide you on proper wording for particular situations such as parents, bride and groom, or bride's parents. This is the perfect idea for those who are not satisfied with any of the options offered.

Most people want to capture the spirit of their wedding day in the invitation. It is hard to imagine not being able to find the perfect one with all the choices that are out there. A simple and elegant style from wedding paper divas is done with labels. This invitation is a solid dark color with contrasting light writing tied together with an uncomplicated label containing two names and the date of wedding.

Simplicity is style. Fold and tucks including invitation, and enclosure cards are sweet and modern especially if your colors are light. Shimmering lavender, light pink and pale blue look great for announcing a spring wedding.

It is important to get started on the wedding invitations as soon as possible because after choosing them they have to be printed and mailed and there must be room for error. It is also important to make sure that when using a company it should be a reputable one. You must have proof that they will print beautiful cards. With the who, what, when and where finished, the rest is excitement and anticipation for that big

Weddings are often a time of complete excess, when people eat, drink and dance to their heart's content. After all, a wedding is one of the happiest moments in a loved one's life, and there is no better occasion to celebrate than the happy joining of two hearts. However, the amount of STUFF that ends up going in to wedding planning and the amount of WASTE that often ends up resulting is something that can be avoided. There are plenty of ways to keep your environmentally conscious conscience awake, even on a day when all worries should be tossed to the wind.

Presents: Getting married is, frankly, one of the most lucrative endeavors you can embark upon. That is, if you're not footing the bill for the food, the band, the hall, the invitations, the... What I mean to say is nowadays the bride and groom are showered with so many gifts, they may as well have been let loose in the aisles of Bed, Bath and Beyond with an unlimited credit card. But with the number of presents possibly clearing a hundred, you are probably also going to see a lot of wrapping paper. Paper, bags, bows, ribbons: It's all very pretty to look at, but when the smoke has cleared on the dance floor and you are left with Christmas morning to the tenth degree, you may want to think about where all that trash is going. Instead of having guests bring fancily wrapped presents, suggest that they either bring their gift in a reusable bag or that they simply reserve it for you at the store. You'll still appreciate it just as much, and you won't have all the waste that comes along with it.

Another alternative to the endless unwrapping is to put on your gift registry things that can't be packages.

For example, ask for help with airline tickets if you're going on vacation for your honeymoon. Or check out the Honeymoon Registry at www.thehoneymoon.com This allows you to select indulgences that you'd like on your honeymoon, like couples massages on the beach or a sunset sail. What a great gift for other people to give, and there's no wrapping paper involved.

Another one of the most beautiful aspects of a wedding is the abundance of flowers. From the bouquet in the bride's hands to the arrangements on every table, splashes of color and sprays of aroma enhance the joyful ambience. But when you really think about it, that's a lot of dead flowers that will go into the trash at the end of the night. Even if the flowers make it into the hands of guests, they'll still die in a few days. But if you choose to use centerpieces that are potted plants, then your guests can take home a piece of the wedding, plant it in their garden, and remember your special day for years to come.

Another way to stay green at your wedding is to think about what individuals and companies you are patronizing. Weddings are typically major expenditures, and the people you choose are not only getting work, they're getting exposure. For your caterer, try to choose someone who will buy local, organic ingredients as much as possible. Even highlight on the menu the things that are made from the local bounty. Try to create a menu that corresponds with the season. If, for example, your wedding is in October, perhaps a squash soup made of local produce could be on the menu. If your wedding is in July, feature the ripe summer tomatoes. These ingredients will be the most delicious, and in addition, they'll raise your guests' awareness about the importance of buying local and organic.

I recently went to a wedding of two special education teachers. In the place where centerpieces would usually be, they had index cards that said "Thank you for support." This is a home for autistic adults that relied almost solely on private donations. If you think about a place where you could cut corners a little bit, you could use that leftover money to donate to a charity or cause that's important to you. Remember, as the bride and groom, you are queen and king for a day. People will pay attention to the things that are important to you, this day above all others. So if you want to bring something to people's attention, take the floor and take your stand.

If you're thinking about having a wedding in the Hamptons, Wölffer Estate Vineyard, located in beautiful Sagaponack is an extraordinary location. Situated on 60 acres of impeccably cared for vines, the Tuscan-style winery is the perfect setting for a unique wedding. Your ceremony may be tucked away in the middle of the vineyard with a hydrangea covered gazebo as the backdrop. Walk down the aisle surrounded by vines with music playing in the background. You and your guests will take a short walk to the lawn of the winery at the base of the vineyard where the cocktail reception takes place. A bar, benches and teak tables and chairs are set up on the lawn so guests can take in the beautiful view and light. Hors d'oeuvres are passed and often augmented with a stationary table of Tuscan or Mediterranean delicacies. In keeping with the vineyard theme, a tasting table of Wölffer's award-winning wines is often set up so guests can sample a variety of wines. A delicious dinner is provided by one of Wöölffer's preferred caterers and is served on the beautiful stone terrace overlooking the vineyard. The terrace is covered overhead and sheer flaps can be brought down if it is cool or if it rains. The band and dancing is in the tasting room adjacent to the terrace. This area supplies ample room for dancing and an inside bar area.

The winery space is a blank canvas waiting for each individual bride to contribute their own special style. Many brides design a Tuscan-style theme that works perfectly with the setting. Wooden farm tables that seat 8 to 20 guests are set up so that all guests have perfect views of the vineyard. They are often set with an assortment of colorful Tuscan-style china, linen runners and napkins in colors taken from the stones on the terrace or ochre-bleached walls of the winery. Menus designed to work with the setting are often highlighted by wonderful local ingredients indigenous to the area.

Keb Mo' Performs At WHBPAC

On October 7, three time Grammy-award winning singer-songwriter Keb' Mo' will be gracing the intimate stage at Westhampton Beach Performing Arts Center with his presence. Known for his mastery of blues music and supreme command of the guitar, Mo' provides audiences with top-notch live performances that incorporate pop, rock, folk, jazz and other genres, while embracing the musical sounds of multiple eras.

Born in 1951 in South Central Los Angeles as Kevin Moore, Mo' learned to play various musical instruments while growing up, but excelled with the guitar. Both his parents were from the South and raised him to appreciate both blues and gospel music. Early in his life, drawing inspiration from the most accomplished bluesmen — Muddy Waters formally McKinley Morganfield, Taj Mahal formally Henry St. Clair Fredericks —

Kevin Moore adopted the nickname, Keb' Mo'. His first musical gig was playing the steel drums and upright bass in a calypso band, but later he moved on to performing with several blues bands. He was quoted as saying, "The Blues is my history, my culture"

When he was 21 years old Mo' began recording music with Papa John Creach, legendary violinist for the rock bands Jefferson Starship and Hot Tuna. Eight years later in 1980, he released his debut album, Rainmaker, with Chocolate City Records, a subsidiary of Casablanca Records, under the name Kevin Moore. Mo' spent the rest of the 80s working as a staff writer for A&M Records and jammin' with the Whodunit Band and famous American blues artists such as Albert Collins and Big Joe Turner. It wasn't until 1994 that he released his self-titled album, Keb' Mo', a critically acclaimed record and now collectible that featured covers of two songs by Robert Johnson, one of the most notable Delta Blues musicians in history and who Mo' portrayed in the 1994'documentary film Can't You Hear the Wind Howl. In 1996, Mo' released Just Like You, an album that earned him the Grammy award for Best Contemporary Blues Album. A year later, he performed fourteen songs on the television program "Sessions at West 54th" with musicians Laval Belle, Reggie McBride, Joellen Friedcken and a guest appearance by legendary blues pianist Dr. John. In 1998, he released Slow Down, and his second Grammy award for Best Contemporary Blues Album soon followed. The album includes the song Muddy Waters, a tribute to the blues legend, and the song "Rainmaker," previously featured on his first album 18 years prior. In 2000, Mo' released his fourth album The Door and an album he made for children titled Big Wide Grin. Three years later, Mo' appeared in Martin Scorsese's film series The Blues and in 2004, he released Keep it Simple, which yet again, earned him a Grammy award in the Contemporary Blues category. His latest album Suitcase was released in 2006 and Mo' is currently touring with his fourman band, which consists of Les Falconer (drums), Reggie McBride (bass), Jeff Paris (keyboards) and Clayton Gibb (guitar).

Over the years, Mo' has collaborated with musicians outside his genre including Amy Grant, Chapman, Eric Clapton and Dixie Chicks (the song "I Hope" that he co-wrote for their latest album Taking the Long Way was Grammy-nominated for Country Song of the Year). Mo' also composed the theme song to Martha Stewart's television show "Martha Stewart Living." "I wanted to make a piece of music that was very homey," Mo' said, referring to the song. "Something that felt warm, like a nice hot cup of tea." He has also performed on the late night circuit including "The Late Show With David Letterman" and "The Late Late Show With Craig Ferguson" and on the television series "Sesame Street," "Touched by an Angel," "American Dreams" and "West Wing," and earlier this year he performed at the Sundance Film

Keb' Mo' is no stranger to the East End. He has performed at The Stephen Talkhouse in Amagansett along with several other Long Island venues over the years. Whether he is performing acoustic or backed by his band, Mo's smooth as silk vocals, personable lyrics and skillful guitar strumming do not disappoint. Don't miss his performance at WHBPAC because it's not every day that we have the opportunity to experience a night in the Delta right here in the Hamptons.

- Janine Cheviot

WHBPAC is located at 76 Main Street, Westhampton Beach. Keb' Mo' will be performing October 7 at 8 p.m. Tickets cost $50/$65/$80. For more information call (631) 288-1500 or visit www.whbpac.org.

review: gone missing...by gordin & christiano

Ever lost a cherished object, a beloved pet, or just misplaced your cellphone? A marvelous group of six charming actors under Steven Cosson's guidance are serving up a stylish little ditty, Gone Missing, at the Barrow Street Theater, where their thoughtful musical weaves a spell of pure delight by way of a series of vignettes on an eclectic array of objects that have Gone

Combine one part performance art, with another part musical theater, add a heavy dose of documentary, stir in a continuous z drizzle of smart and funny, make sure the actors serve with ample helpings of panache, and voila, you have the formula for an inventive meditation by turns witty, odd, paradoxical, and even very serious.

Conceived by Steven Cosson from interviews he had the company conduct with a £ wide range of subjects, the evening delivers a sense of the dramatic, with a sense the mundane. Cosson's script juxtapositions extraordinary tales with commonplace stories giving the proceedings a unique feel, and Michael Friedman's wonderful score and catchy tunes add to the consistently whimsical tone.

The remarkable performers are part of a group of 28 actors founded by Cosson known as the Civilians, an old vaudeville term referring to people not in show business. They have built a reputation by touring the United States and Europe with their form of documentary musical theater, where the group has delved into subjects like the news, evangelism, and even the

The actors make an excellent ensemble, but Emily Ackerman and Stephen Plunkett are outstanding. Whether she is playing a pet psychic or an arthritic old woman, Ackerman brings her portraits to life by imbuing them with distinct contradictions that make them amusingly human. Plunkett is most memorable as a New York Police Officer, a recurring character that describes finding bodies with missing parts. His stature and voice display a tough exterior while his character has a genial sense of humor to deal with the horrors. His dark humor manifests itself when he describes some of the evening's most grue-

The other cast members all deliver marvelous moments as well. Robbie Collier Sublett shines as a proper Englishman who remembers a time when he lost his language. Colleen Werthmann tells a simple story about a child losing a sock doll and despite being told in fragments, the actress' unsentimentally gives the tale a sweet resonance. Jennifer R. Morris plays a sophisticate whose obsessive search for one of her missing Gucci pumps is quite amusing. Damian Baldet provides guitar accompaniment and has the most unenviable challenge of playing an elderly woman.

There is a trio of musicians on piano, bass and drums under the musical supervision of Andy Boroson, and the stylized choreography by Jim Augustine feels like Divo in concert, but gives the evening yet another unifying

The actors all wearing identical grey suits stand in front of a simple blue wall bathed in Thomas Dunn's ethereal blue lighting. We end up where we began, but we have Gone Missing into a fragmented world that has coaxed us into our own consideration of the meaning of objects.

Gone Missing is now playing at Barrow Street Theater, 27 Barrow Street at Seventh Avenue South. For tickets call (212) 239-6200.

"artists make movies": david lynch's mulholland drive

Completing this year's series, "Artists Make Movies" sponsored by the Pollock-Krasner House, will be David Lynch's provocative movie, Mulholland Drive.

Lynch's films have always been controversial, starting with his earliest one, Eraserhead, and continuing with Blue Velvet, The Lost Highway, and most recently, Inland Empire. (As an artist, Lynch could also be considered edgy; this critic remembers one particular painting with real, dead flies.)

So what makes Lynch unique, even in today's world of weird, violent, incomprehensible movies? First, he's a true independent spirit, still persisting proved to be a great critical and popular success.

While Lynch can be a "painterly" director, his images filled with striking colors, evocative compositions and odd-looking characters, his stories are mesmerizing as well.

Mulholland Drive is no exception, It's a murder mystery that's much more than meets the eye, a psycho-sexual romp through the mind and heart of Naomi Watts as the naive heroine, where nothing is what it appears to be. Would-be actress Ms. Watts, upon arriving in Los Angeles for the first time, says "I can't believe it" as she gives vent to her excitement. Truer words were never spoken.

What's unique about Mulholland Drive is the excitement that the film evokes in the viewer, too, as we are drawn, almost against our will, into both the images and the plot.

Lynch's movies are ones we experience, not just sit back and enjoy.

Isn't that what all good artists should aim for?

- Marion Wolberg Weiss

Mulholland Drive will be shown on Thursday, Sept. 27 at 7:00PM at Stony Brook Southampton Campus, Chancellors Hall. Call 631-324-4929 for information.

in the Hollywood system. His films are not gratuitous made for the teenage market, but artistic expressions of his worldview. Like Martin Scorsese, Lynch is an authentic filmmaker in this critic's mind, comparable to other great "auteurs" like Stanley Kubrick and Alfred Hitchcock. (Like Hitchcock, Lynch is also fascinated with the idea of the "double ganger," meaning "the walking double.")

Lynch's style, like his paintings, is bizarre, a combination of Surrealism and Expressionism. Thus, his images may be incongruous, people may say and do things that don't make sense, reality may be ambiguous, seeming like a dream. Simply put, in a David Lynch film what you see is not what you get.

Moreover, some filmgoers are confused by Lynch's plot; they can't seem to follow it, as the beginning, middle and end become blurred. But people said that about Pulp Fiction, too, and it

MINI – MOVIE REVIEWS

The Hunting Party

Richard Gere and Terrence Howard star in a film about two bad boy reporters who attempt to score an interview with one of the world's most dangerous war criminals, a Bosnian fellow based on a real man. As the two risk their lives and get closer than the CIA ever got, it becomes clear that, if nothing else, journalism is a way more exciting profession than is usually depicted on screen.

In the Valley of Elah

ed films, a family lost their son, a soldier in Iraq. As both grief and anger set in, another seemingly unrelated cast of characters connect through life's twists and turns as they try and uncover the truth about a soldier's death. Will probably make you cry.

Dragon Wars: D - War

Based on the old Korean legend that unknown creatures will return and devastate the planet, this film depicts a reporter trying to capture the chaos with the help of a strangely unexplained sick child (not his own). With the Imoogi dragons closing in on LA (the world's most important city, apparently), the two need to save the world and themselves. This is clearly the best film of 2007, and possibly one of the best feats of film ever. Seriously.

The Kingdom

An elite FBI team sent to find a killer in a hostile country follows a similar theme to many other movies this week, as well as a similar pattern, and adds nothing new but Jamie Foxx and Chris Cooper to the mix, who seem sort of disappointed that Clive Owen took Shoot 'Em Up.

The Game Plan

An NFL superstar quarterback living a debaucherous bachelor lifestyle discovers that he has a secret seven-year-old daughter from a previous hook up! Now this is the stuff of good entertainment, and plausible at that. Finally.

Guy de Fraumeni's Hollywood In The Hamptons

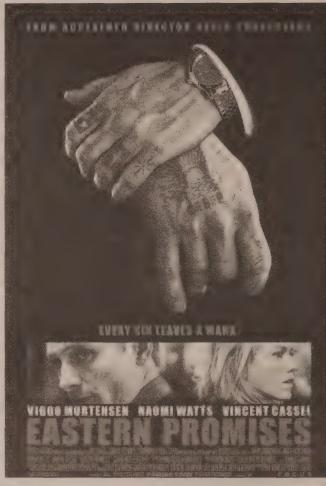

Too violently inhumane? Is Jody Foster's guntoting, revenge film, The Brave One, exploiting violence? Or, is the contemplative but extremely brutal movie of Russian mobs in London, Eastern Promises, courting blood-letting? Compare this!

Was it the great dramatist Shakespeare who asked, "Wither humanity?" This poor humorist insists, "Humanity is fast withering away." To explain the lame joke, simply look at the bigger issues: The huge losses of the nation's rights by the unraveling of our Constitution. Further, check out the stately cold decisions against unfortunate individuals struck down by the new Supreme Court. But, so what? Compared to the inhumanity expressed on our entertainment screens, big and small, who can care about a woman loosing her suit against eleven years of work discrimination because of a late filing date or, a man condemned to life in imprisonment for stealing 150 videostapes?

We've grown accustomed to the amusement of brains being blown against kitchen walls as readily as spaghetti flung up to the ceiling to test its doneness. Eastern Promises' Canadian director, David Cronenberg, has been blowing our minds by blowing up heads in Scanners (1981) and, making our skin crawl by decomposing human flesh in The Fly (1986). He's added much the same in other films and by endowing them with an undeniable arty-ness, has gained an international audience of the intelligence. The globalized aspects of his new thriller feed that audience and take in the internalized physical and mental world as well. That is to say, the body and mind-bent soul.

Russian expatriates in London recreate their dark, crime-culture underworld, which resembles the criminal organizations of other nationalities in other nations. Their family ties, their codes of "ethics" and idiosyncratic signs and symbols translatable by few others than the shadowed members of the outlaw dealers in misery. It is into this inextricably doomed demimonde that Anna, a hospital midwife is sucked as she guilessly attempts to discover the ties to a baby she has delivered. With the baby's dead mother's diary as a guide, she stumbles into the immorality of slavery – worldwide trade in entrapment and sex. Anna is portrayed by Naomi Watts as compellingly as the events that will swallow her up into the fantastically alien land she finds. Anna's father was Russian and her mother British. However, unable to read or write Russian she will find nothing identifiable in a fancy Russian, restaurant the diary leads her to, run by a gentle monstrosity Semyon (Armin Mueller-Stahl). He is actually the head of the segment of the Vory v Zakone, the Russian Mafia, created in Stalin's vast prison camps. Behind those walls, the inmate's biographies were pictured with tattoos on their bodies. These were the files to follow them. Those tattoo stories are written all over

Viggo Mortensen's body. As Nikolai he is the star of the film. He's Semyon's driver and butcher-killer. Not that Semyon couldn't handle it himself. He will reveal unspeakable horrors to Anna and Nikloai. Semyon's psychotic son, Kirill (Vincent Cassel) takes lessons from father. Semyon's grand-fatherly translation of the diary ensnares the innocent Anna, even as she is being wooed by the stoic Nikolai who is as ambitious as he is dashing and noble as a knight. Anna's not sure he's a gangster, but must trust him. The terrible Semyon treats Nikolai like a son and might not mind his moving up in the family business. Mr. Mortensen gives a standout performance with a stand up outstanding body as well.

Being read by the crime syndicate will more than be matched by his nude steam bath fight with two thugs armed with knives. It will have you and the audience gasping and I'm sure it just may inspire a bunch of cult groups. Requiring sensitivity, His scenes of forced sex with a young girl while being watched, show some real depth. All in all though you'll be held by Cronenberg's intent upon all that is dreadful.

On a different level, there's an intelligent script by Steve Knight who drew us into Dirty Pretty Things, again multicultural London and the ugly trafficking in the sale of human organs. Eastern Promises wrestles with the split nature of humanity as in the possibility of using violence for the good. Cronenberg divides only the plot into good and bad, evil and humanity. His direction begins with a signature attention getter—the teenage mother's uterus is hemorrhaging to expel the child, a product of rape. Anna's uncle, a kindly but racist fool, insists it is because the father is black.

And so it goes. Life just isn't pretty or fair.

Guy-Jean de Fraumeni is the producer/writer/director of award-winning European and American feature films. He has been a judge at Major Film and TV award competitions including the Oscars, the Emmy's and various film festivals. Sarah Halsey assists him.

Silvia Lehrer's Cooking Column

James Beard, who died in 1985, was a quintessentially American man well ahead of his time. In 1974, when Beard on Food, one of his many cook books was published, he wrote of the need for farmers markets which only existed in Los Angeles at the time. He writes, "It is my dream to have the continent spanned, from coast to coast, with markets like this." The book, a compilation of essays, from his numerous syndicated columns has recently been reissued by Bloomsbury USA.

Beard on Food is indeed a valuable gift from this Dean of American Cooking. In a foreword by Mark Bittman, Mr. Bittman writes, "with his (Beard) regular writing deadlines, which, especially after a few years, drive the writer to constantly seek new and interesting fodder." How well I can identify with this. James Beard had no formal training but he traveled extensively and brought his experiences to the table.

In an introductory note, Julia Child wrote in 1999, in another reissue of this book in 2000, "What a pleasure for those of us who knew Jim to read him again, and what a happy discovery for new generations who will now know him."

I studied with James Beard in his now famous brownstone on 12th street in Manhattan in the late seventies. What a treasure of memories surfaced for me as I read his references to real people cooking real food. Like the time he was invited to the home of an artist that he did not know and how much he enjoyed the artist Ed Giobbi's Italian ancestral dishes. "That was exactly what I wanted to eat today," Mr. Beard wrote.

A larger-than-life man in many ways, I could see him today sitting tall in his captain's chair in his teaching kitchen, surrounded by cooking areas and cook tops, as he espoused the use of the freshest and finest ingredients and encouraged the home cook to be relaxed about cooking. His recipes in this book are proof of this as they are written in a conversational style. Tweak them if you like, Mr. Beard would like that.

BASIC SALAD NICOISE

Inspired by a farmers market in Grasse, in the south of France, Mr. Beard was able to "purchase a package of greens to which you would add tuna, anchovies, hard-cooked eggs, tomatoes and the famous olives of Provence."

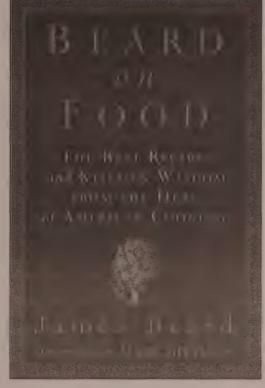

For a basic Salad Nicoise, cover a large platter with crisp fresh greens. Place one or two 7-ounce cans of tuna in olive oil, well drained. Two cans will usually serve four to six. Surround the tuna with 20 to 30 anchovy fillets, well drained. Around the edge of the greens arrange 4-6 ripe tomatoes, quartered or 12-18 cherry tomatoes and 4-6 hard-cooked eggs, and add a sprinkling of small black olives, preferably the tiny Nicoise.

Now arrange on top of these basic ingredients vegetables of your choice: rings of sliced red onion, tiny boiled new potatoes, pimento strips, and green beans cooked just until bitey-crisp. Add a sprinkling of chopped fresh basil, if available. Pour over a dressing made of 3/4 cup olive oil, 1/4 cup red wine vinegar, and salt and pepper to taste, and toss lightly. Serve as a main course with crusty French bread.

NOSTALGIC SPINACH ROLL

The spinach roll, which is actually a spinach soufflé, was one of the most popular recipes taught in the seventies. Mr. Beard enjoyed eating it alongside a shrimp sandwich

You will need about 3 pounds of spinach or 4 packages of frozen chopped spinach. Fresh spinach should be washed and well picked over, place in a kettle with no water other than that clinging to its leaves, tightly covered and wilted down for just a few minutes. Drain well and chop coarsely. Thaw frozen spinach in a pan over very gentle heat and squeeze dry.

Put the spinach in a bowl. Mix in 6 tablespoons melted butter, 1 1/2 teaspoons salt, 1/2 teaspoon freshly round black pepper and 2 or 3 good dashed of nutmeg. Beat in 4 egg yolks, one by one, then beat the egg whites until they hold soft peaks and fold them thoroughly into the spinach mixture. Taste for seasoning.

Lightly butter an 11 by 14 by 1/2 inch jelly roll pan, line it with waxed paper, butter the paper and coat it with bread crumbs. Spread the spinach mixture in the pan evenly with a rubber spatula and sprinkle with a little grated cheese. Bake in a 350 degree oven for about 15 minutes or just until firm when touched lightly with fingertips.

While the roll is baking, saute 2/3 cup finely chopped scallion in 4 tablespoons butter until just Mix in 1/2 cup dry vermouth or white wine, stir well and season to taste with salt and pepper, a dash of Tabasco and 1 tablespoon chopped fresh tarragon. Gradually stir in light or heavy cream or evaporated milk, cook, and stir until nicely thickened. Mix in 1/2 cup chopped parsley and taste for seasoning.

Remove the baked roll from the oven, cover it with a piece of buttered foil, and invert on a board. Peel off the waxed paper. Spread with two-thirds of the herb white sauce, then very carefully roll up like a jelly roll onto a serving plate, using the foil as a pusher. spoon remaining sauce over the center and serve at once to six people.

Dining in the Hamptons

What's for dinner, deer?

The first time I tried venison I didn't like it. A friend of mine, who was a hunter, had some venison in his freezer from the previous week and by the time it reached the dinner table it was tough and tasteless. The truth of the matter is, preparing good venison starts with the hunter. Preparation begins immediately after the deer is shot and how it's done plays a big part in whether the venison is tasty and delicious or gamy and chewy. Prompt and careful field dressing, chilling and refrigeration are very important. Years later, I tried venison again and because it was prepared correctly, I found that I enjoyed it very much.

During colonial times, venison was the main source of meat for the dinner table. Early settlers had few domesticated animals and the ones they had were rarely used for meat. The women of that period had many ways of preparing and preserving wild game. And many of their recipes have survived to the present day.

Today we mainly serve beef, pork, veal, seafood and poultry on a daily basis, and many people don't care to cook venison because they are intimidated by the process or have heard about, or have had first-hand experience with, deer meat that was dry and tough with an unpleasant flavor. If you have never eaten exotic meats you may think that the preparation method is difficult or time consuming. Nothing could be further from the truth. While there are a variety of ways to prepare venison, you can also use it in recipes that you are already familiar with. Typically, you can replace beef, pork, or even lamb with venison in all of your favorite meals.

The nice thing about venison is that it is naturally lean, and low in calories, fat and cholesterol. A 3 oz. serving of venison loin has only about 139 calories, 62 grams of cholesterol and 5 grams of fat. A comparable cut of beef has 223 calories, 77 grams of cholesterol and 13 grams of fat.

Grilled venison is a personal favorite of mine. The high heat and quick cooking time suit the more tender cuts of meat (such as filets) as well as ground venison, if you wish to fix burgers. If you are grilling venison as burgers, it is not necessary to get these patties as well done as a beef burger. However, many people, after a lifetime of well done burgers, will prefer to have their venison burgers cooked to at least medium.

The most important thing to keep in mind is that, because venison has very little fat in it, you can easily overcook it. To avoid this, do not cook beyond medium rare and stay with your grill the entire time. Even a minute can make the difference in the quality of flavor and tenderness of your cuts of venison.

To prevent the filets from sticking to your grill, you can brush them very lightly with oil on each side before placing them on the grill. This light glaze will not affect the flavor of the meat, but will keep your tender filets from sticking to the grate of your grill.

When preparing venison for cooking, trim off as much fat as possible. Any visible fat should be removed since it adversely affects the flavor of the meat. A good venison recipe should include another form of fat such as butter, cooking oil, bacon or even beef fat to enhance the flavor. Never salt venison before cooking. Salt inhibits browning and removes juices. Choose a method of cooking that adds moisture to the meat. Slow simmering in a sauce, frequent basting or cooking in a crackpot will prevent venison from drying out and becoming tough or chewy.

To help inhibit the strong or unpleasant taste of venison you should soak the meat in salt, vinegar and water for several hours to help remove the gamy taste. Try combinations of thyme, parsley, garlic, onions, soup mixes and marinades to tenderize the meat and disguise the gamy flavor. The following ingredients can be used as marinades for venison: vinegar, wine vinegar and wine, French or Italian salad dressings, tomato sauce, stewed tomatoes, orange, lemon and grapefruit juice.

For a delicious venison roast, place a cut of venison into a large skillet. Pour on a quart jar of homemade canned tomatoes. Add a diced onion and a splash of Worcestershire sauce. Simmer on low for 2 to 3 hours. Enjoy!

ART COMMENTARY With Marion Wolberg Weiss

GROUP SHOW AT SOUTHAMPTON HISTORICAL MUSEUM

Last week's "Art Commentary" considered how environmental aspects such as physical filters could influence viewers' perceptions of art works. The current exhibit at Southampton Historical Museum is another example of the ways physical setting and context can have an impact on our aesthetic appreciation and understanding.

The Museum/house located at 17 Meeting House Lane sits in a lovely garden. The interior is just as beautiful and one can't help but be impressed by the period (1890s) furniture and accessories. It may be a cliché, but it's still true that we feel as if we are entering another time and place, escaping from the materialism and stresses of modern life.

Counterbalancing this very special ambience are the paintings/photographs of Frank Wimberley, Michael Butler, Joanne Williams Carter and Herbert Randall. Each of the artists has a different style and the show's curator is to be lauded for his/her selections – such diversity reinforces the 1890s setting that surrounds the contemporary art. Both the varied styles and subject matter, for that matter, suggest how life used to be – not better or worse than the 1890s, just different.

Work by Michael Butle

Take, for example, Mr. Butler's paintings, recalling a charming folk-art style. Here, domestic life (for this critic evoking the 1950s in the living room scene, "ShaBop Sha-Boom") is juxtaposed with more ancient times featuring Biblical and mythological references.

In these latter images, there's a sense of Expressionism adding to their emotional power. Mr. Randall's photographs hearken back to an earlier time, too, documenting the Civil Rights Movement in 1964's "Freedom Summer." The style is Expressionism as well, literally capturing the stark contrasts between black and white lighting, and figuratively the potent conflicts between the races. While both Mississippi and Manhattan are mostly the subjects, yours truly especially likes the desolate image of a lone figure inhabiting New York's mean streets.

Ms. Carter's more realistic paintings are homage to another kind of landscape, namely Eastern Long Island. Yet her images also recall an earlier period when telephone lines were visible, strung across the fields or alongside train tracks as guides giving comfort to the traveler.

Ms. Carter's work also offers homage to a bygone era, when farms signified the rural, rustic life we are seeing disappear before our very eyes. Mr. Wimberley's paintings don't honor a past era because they are abstractions, but they provide a contrast to the historic setting, nonetheless. His fine use of textures and materials has always been a signature trait, and these pieces are no exception. There's no need to guess what his inspiration might have been. We can merely enjoy his arresting compositions and colors as they exist, whatever and wherever the context may be.

The show at the Southampton Historical Museum will be on view until early November. Call 631-283-2494.

Honoring the Artist: Terry Lewis

Some things never change, which is a good sign when it comes to this week's cover artist, Terry Lewis. That is to say, Ms. Lewis remains the same positive, spirited person we remember talking to several years ago when she was last on the cover. Even so, some aspects of Ms. Lewis' life are different, as the following conversation proves.

Q: As far as things being the same, your cover "Wedding By the Water" conveys your signature traits.

A: Yes, some people have labeled the style similar to folk art, but that's vague. I'd call it decorative. A lot of my work captures a bit of Americana. Some images have the American flag. This one doesn't.

Q: But it is Americana in the sense that it depicts a recognizable event that's so much a part of American life, a wedding.

A: Yes, and I hope it evokes the spirit, charm and color that I like to convey. I do consider myself a colorist

Q: You're also known for painting fireworks, which also are a part of Americana, especially on July 4th.

A: Yes. I did a memorial cover for George Plimpton for Dan's Papers, showing fireworks at Boys and Girls Harbor.

Q: Would you say this focus on Americana means you're patriotic?

A: I am one of the patriotic citizens of this country. As an example, I did a sculpture commemorating September 11. It's now outside the restaurant The Mansion at York Avenue and 86th Street. I go there to clean the sculpture from time-to-time and my daughter Abbie helped me the last time. She is really good at it.

Q: But you also like to paint seascapes and beach-scapes, so often you can combine the Americana theme with the beach and ocean. Another consistency is your attention to details. I know you were in TV after graduating from Hunter College, first painting backdrops then as a producer. Did that focus on detail in TV influence your own art?

A: I have two sets of traits – one is the detail, but I am also more free and flexible in my personal life. But yes, being in TV meant I had to be flexible as well as resourceful, disciplined, to think on my feet. And to make deadlines. I use all of that in my various projects.

Q: I understand that you created special holiday cards for Alec Baldwin featuring Rockefeller Center, which is really cool after he won the Emmy for "30 Rock."

A: That was fun.

Q: Do you see yourself changing direction or taking on different kinds of projects in the future?

A: I would like to create mixed media pieces in metal and clay and make them 3D. My September 11 sculpture influenced me a lot in this regard. I would like to return to Hawaii and live there. You know, I attended the University of Hawaii. I've been back several times since. Ten years from now I will probably be traveling to other places also, perhaps New Mexico or Colorado.

Q: In the meantime, I know you continue to work on several projects at the same time.

A: Yes, like limited edition prints, note cards, premiums

Q: And, of course your paintings.

A: Of course. Andy Warhol said, "Keep painting. Keep painting. Even if people don't like it."

Q: People do like your paintings.

A: I hope so.

The Journey Within

If you ask someone where the next great journey could take you, very few would answer the mind. Yet I find myself on such a journey now. My guide is Britta Dubbels C.H.T. of pre'sent Inc. Ms. Dubbels does Hypnosis and Energy Work. The second you meet Britta you notice something amazing. She has a peacefull radiance that at once disarms and nurtures her clients. Her goal is to help each of us find the happiness and center in our own lives. I explained that my life was not as vibrant as it used to be and stress has consistently affected my health.

Britta explained that I could regain what I had lost and learn to handle stress in new ways. She said "It is through self realization that a person can have afulfilling job, be in love, make money, have success, and enjoy it all"

Under hypnosis the subconscious works with the conscious mind to resolve disputes. Britta says that the number one misconception about hypnotherapy is a loss of control. I was surprised to learn that being under hypnosis means you are really in a more relaxed state that allows your mind to accept change.

To counter my self-doubts Britta shows me the love and strength I already possess at my very core. Using semi-guided imagery I was able to find the spirit guide if you will, that is always with me. We start with imagery of a place I will feel completely comfortable at. From the safety of an imagined warm, field next to a stream I lye back in the high grass and soak in the peacefulness. As I looked up I could see a globe of light that hovered a few feet above me. The light showered me with tremendous love and support. It flowed through every pour and enveloped me. There are many names that different cultures would use to describe it as. I choose only to be happy that it exists for me.

One of the great tools that hypnosis gives you is tailoring a new response to bad habits. Now whenever I am confronted by a stressful situation my left index finger slowly rises. I am immediately aware that if I dwell on it, I will be lost in the thought. I replace it with a positive and my fin-

So much of what shapes us as adults happens in childhood. Sensing the need to resolve and revisit something there, Britta asked me if I wanted to go back. Without hesitation I agreed. We went back to a traumatic time when I was eight and my ten-year-old sister was dying of Leukemia. It was a devastating event for my entire family. I didn't expect it to be more than a visit, but it became much more. I was asked to see my sister as she looks now. She appeared as a young woman, caring and smiling. Britta posed the question "was there something I wanted to get off my chest"? Tears poured down my face. I told my sister that I was mad at her for the years I needed her to be there for me, and the turmoil that we all had dealing with her loss! After a moment Britta then asked if I wanted to say I was sorry for something. Once again the tears came. I had held in guilt from childhood from an incident where I told my parents what my sister was going to give them as a present. I asked her forgiveness, she smiled and easily gave it to me. I floated up leaving the memory. I then saw my sister as a child again and hugged her. She seemed so small and I forgave her for not being there, as I now understood she was just a helpless child of ten. As I was brought out of hypnosis I saw Britta smiling. My eyes went wide, and all I could do was say "wow!"

As a result of my sessions I feel free of the stress of life and more interested in living it. I am a much better man for having gone through the experience and forever grateful for such a caring guide. There are over one hundred and forty things that Hypnosis can help you with. It's a journey that is as fascinating as it is helpful. I highly recommend you give it a try. Britta Dubbels of pre'sent Inc. is located on Main Street Bridgehampton. Call (631) 379-

Dans GOMES Light My Fire...

Imagine walking into your bedroom to a light scent of ginger, pineapple and mandarin. The mandarin is the strongest of the three. The scent is Lania, an orange pillar candle, made by a company called Archipelago, and you don't even have to light the wick to enjoy the naturally blissful aroma it gives off.

Candles are the easiest and most evocative way to create an ambiance. They can set the mood in any home. The minute a candle is lit, a room has a new flicker of light, a new aroma and a new feeling. Both romantic and relaxing, the candles we choose for our homes help to define the spaces we live in.

There are countless scents to choose from today. From Acacia, a scent of the yellow puff flowers, to Zinnia, a heavily floral scent with green undertones. Pleasing scents to consider for the fall months are Apple Crisp, which gives off the scent of fresh baked apples and cinnamon, and Fig, which emanates floral and lemon lime enhanced with coconut and bergamot. With vast arrays of herbal scents floating around our homes, guests will enter and instantly enjoy their surroundings.

Many candle makers incorporate aromatherapy into their candles. Not only do these scents smell fantastic, but it is believed that through these herbal oils we not only set the mood of the room but our body as well. Aromatherapy was discovered in the 1920s by a French chemist named Rene Maurice Gattefosse, when he accidentally set his arm on fire while working in his lab. He thrust his arm into the nearest liquid, which happened to be a bucket of lavender oil. His arm healed tremendously fast and had no scaring as a result. He then devoted his life to the healing power of essential oils, which are the fragrant oils extracted from plants. All-natural organic candles are made from these oils. Popular choices being, lavender, grapefruit, lemongrass and peppermint. Lavender is calming, while peppermint is livelier and helps nausea and Grapefruit is sweet and citrus-like with the aromatherapy benefit of relieving depression headaches. Lemongrass has been known to eliminate nervous exhaustion.

The right candle should not only smell divine and have special aromatherapy benefits, but also be eco-friendly. Candles are often made with petroleum paraffin. This byproduct of the oil industry surprisingly adds harmful pollutants to the air. It is important that when buying a candle you look for organic ingredients. The most common natural waxes used in candle making are beeswax, soy wax and vegetable wax. Soy candles are becoming increasingly popular because soy is a renewable resource. They are also said to last longer and burn cleaner and cooler. So, aside from being better for the environment, they also burn with less soot. This will keep your favorite candleholder from looking like your least favorite ashtray.

When buying candles it is important to remember that quality comes at a cost. Less pricey candles are often machine-made of paraffin. The scent and color are applied only to the outside by being immersed into an over dip of highly scented and highly unnatural wax and color. A quality candle is hand poured with solid scent and color throughout.

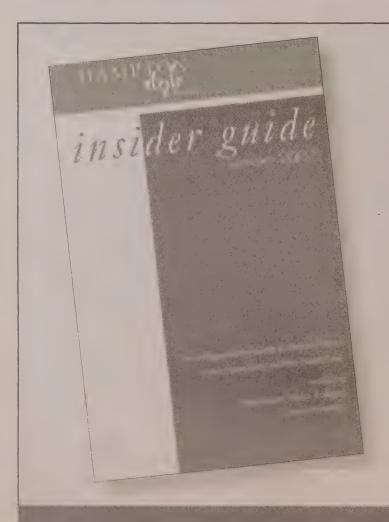

Candles by Archipelago, available at Privet Cove in Southampton, are a wonderful choice. Each candle is hand poured using only the finest ingredients and fragrances, safe, lead free wicks, essential oils and natural fragrances and a premium wax blend. The Thymes aromatic

Candles are also highly recommended. These hand poured organics seem to layer the air with authentic notes from nature and their approximate burn time is

If you want to improve the ambiance and décor of your home, consider lighting a candle to enhance your home, be it a tremendous mansion or a cozy studio.

Also consider buying yourself a candle to add some romance or to bring back the memory of your favorite place. Take your time, enjoy the indulgence and find your ideal scent.

Dans GOME The Garden At Rock Cottage by Lance Brilliantine

Road Kill and the Garden

With the onset of fall this past weekend, wild animals are feverishly preparing for winter. I noticed frogs on the pond soaking up the last warmth of a fading summer; birds devouring everything in sight; deer foraging earlier in the day along roadsides; and our garbage bins more frequently raided by raccoons at night. Along the roadways, I also noticed increased activity by ravens and other scavengers eating the cadavers of dead animals.

There has been significant evidence of road kill on the East End of late. Just this past weekend, for example, I observed five dead deer, a variety of squirrels, birds, raccoons, dogs, and other animals, like mangled grisly reminders of a cruel world - just everywhere. Now, I hate deer as much as the next person because they ravage and destroy my garden plants. I have walled them out wherever possible. However, I am still inspired when I see an antlered stag, or witness a fawn scampering with its mother across a road.

Road kill is something to be sad about, and I wonder why so much of it takes place on the East End where people seem to be so active for one cause or another. Personally, I have occasional, close encounters with animals but tend to drive slowly enough at this time of year because of increased animal activity. I myself averted a collision with a chipmunk, a fox, and at least one deer this past weekend.

Can it be that I am more careful than others? I know I don't drive more slowly. Or, is it that I am more aware of the environment and care more about living things? I am horrified by the thought, because I cannot imagine that I am. It suggests there is very, very little care out there for creatures on this planet. Hmm, and I thought that applied only to humans!

These thoughts sparked enough interest in me to do some research. I was appalled by what I found. Did you know that within the United States alone there are more than four million miles of roadways? Along these roads drive more than 226 million registered vehicles. Vehicles kill one vertebrate animal every 11.5 seconds, and maim countless others. Most encounters are with deer, but the statistics include birds, snakes, turtles, bears, pets, raccoons, and other wild beasties. The global statistics are more frightening, and more

I immediately went out and bought several bags of bird seed, placed last night's leftovers on the deck for the foxes and raccoons, bought of head of lettuce for the rabbits, wrote to a congressman, and made a donation to Elsa's ARK. Actually, I did none of these, except for the bird seed - but felt an urge to do more.

It was very interesting to find, while doing my research, to learn that these vile statistics can be changed without much effort or investment. While I do not like the idea of fencing wooded areas, and prefer the natural state of things, installing fencing just three-feet high along wooded roadways would reduce the road kill of smaller animals by nearly 40%. Areas that install "over road" passageways - a kind of terrestrial bridge to assist animals crossing roads - can reduce impacts with deer, bear, and other large animals by more than 50%. More interesting, and perhaps more easy to adopt, a reduction in speed by just five miles per hour at times of the year when animals are most active could reduce road kill by up to 30%. This personal-responsibility solution would be easy to achieve were it not that we are all so busy and so rushed, and don't have time to care.

You'll ask, of course, what all this has to do with gardening. A lot, I think! In a world without the time to care for living things, what chance does an endangered lady slipper orchid have to survive? A rose garden in Southampton is a wonderful, caring thing but hardly enough to make a difference! If we continue to cut down our forests to create our lawns and pools, and spas - what chance will future generations have to share the inspiration of a stag, or bear, or fox? If we aren't willing to invest our creativity to protect the things that are unable to protect themselves, have we lost the essence of our humanity? And, if we can't slow down five miles an hour to save a defenseless squirrel, have we become a sorry lot?

You can contact Lance Brilliantine with any questions or comments at GardenLance@yahoo.com.

Real Estates by Diane Strecker

Although the high-end real estate market on the East End appears to be virtually unaffected by the recent drop, there is certainly a visible increase to listings on both forks. In East Hampton there are over 1,000 properties now listed online. Just two years ago when a house was put on the market it was scooped up almost immediately and left little to choose from. If a home was located on a body of water it was bound to get offers well over the asking price. And if a home was located on the oceanfront; a bidding war inevitably ensued. There simply were few or no properties entering the market at that time. But times have changed. Currently, there is a healthy inventory of homes available on the East End. In some areas, such as Montauk, there is a flood of listings. Residential properties in Montauk are rising and there are 536 homes actively for sale. Once again, the high- end still stands strong and is selling. The Panoramic View and The Yacht Club all represent multi-million dollar deals that have recently transpired. However, homes $1.5 million and under are becoming more frequent as well. For sale signs seem to be everywhere. The question owners are now asking is whether or not they should be concerned?

On the North Fork, you can't go down any block without seeing two or three homes for sale and small towns such as Jamesport and Mattituck have a bounty of listings. It is obviously leaning towards a buyer's market and prices are finally once again seeing some negotiation, an entity that was lost in real estate deals over the past few years. If a buyer was not willing to pay the asking price, they would lose the deal to someone who would. Prices were firm and most sellers walked away with much more than they anticipated, cashing out with more equity than they ever dreamed of

Although things in the East End real estate world are changing, they are not falling drastically as they are in other markets around the country. The East End still is a hot commodity and has geographical attributes that will always be valuable. The East End is weighed by natural beauty that is incomparable to most markets in the country. On the North Fork, value comes in form of unspoiled farmland, sprawling golf course views and hundreds of acres of grapes on both sides of its shore. So when buyers ask why the is pricing through the roof and investments secure on the East End, take a look around because the answer is obvious. And even though there is a little more to choose from and in some areas prices have come down a tad, the real-estate market on the East End remains one of the strongest in the country.

For under a million there are still some properties to choose from. One can acquire a two bedroom co-op in Montauk on the ocean. The Surf Club unit offers modest accommodations but is directly on the ocean. There is also a pool and tennis court on the three-acre premises. The unit is listed with the Corcoran Group in Montauk at $750,000. In the same price range in East Hampton a 1,600 sq. ft. contemporary cottage with 3 bedrooms and a fireplace is going for $739,000. The tiny getaway has an in-ground pool and is just a short distance from the private beach and marina. This one is listed with Hamptons Realty Group's Amagansett office.

On the North Fork one can purchase a quaint historic charmer just two blocks from the sandy Peconic Bay Beach. This home consists of 1,800 sq. ft. and has two fireplaces, a wood burning stove, 4 bedrooms and 2 baths. There are private guest quarters and an outdoor fireplace. The property is set on a half acre and is listed with Corcoran in Cutchogue at $599,000.

The possibility of owning that East End haven you always dreamed of is not as unattainable as you might think.

THE MIGHTY DUCK

Dear Dan,

Some of your stories are serious and some are spoofs, but you latest, the story titled "The Big Waddle," appears to be serious. I think it would be ludicrous to move the big duck by the second route. It is not the money: Suffolk County has lots of it, and $4.8 million is a drop in the bucket in the scheme of things.

I am concerned about the traffic congestion that a move of this magnitude would cause. And, the waste of fuel; I bet the (duck `moving truck gets only two miles per gallon when loaded with a concrete brick.

May I suggest a third route to move the Big Duck? Transport it across Flanders Road and through the woods and put it on a barge and float it to the new, or rather previous home. (Ducks belong on the water anyway.) That way you will inconvenience traffic for only a few moments as Mr. Duck crosses Route 24. You can probably get the job done this way for only a couple of thousand bucks and between breakfast and lunch so there is no down time for employee's meals.

You may contact me anytime for (free) practical advice.

BIG, BIG MYTH

Dear Dan,

David gave me your e-mail. I hope you don't mind. Thanks for the great mention of the new studio in the Labor Day edition.

Just for the future I wanted to put in my two cents in on the information that was inaccurate. I'm not asking for correction — but just FYI for you to know on a pure factual basis — in case it comes up again. My sense is that the WGA stuff was from outdated information.

1) First of all my name is Kriegman not Kreigma. I'm not sure if there are "Kreigma's" unless it's a lesser tribe who don't know how to spell their own names...it means warrior in German...OK, that's a vanity correction, as long as you write about me any spelling is good!

2) Regarding the union issue, obviously there's a lot of false info, opinion, etc. out there. but for the record, irrefutably:

a) We always paid – throughout the production – union wages for actors, union and directors Guild (of which I'm a member).

b) Writers Guild (of which I am also a member) required a "special contract" because there is no standard writers wage for PBS Productions. We simply couldn't agree on what that special contract should be, and yes, we did eventually reach an agreement. It was a very good one. I'm writing under it now, and I love it!

c) The deals with all the unions had nothing to do with the "special technique." It is a special patented technique but then we're all special – we learned that from Barney.

d) Eventually as a gesture of good will and letting bygones be bygones, I hired all the writers that picketed me on the production. By the way, I had never hired them before so strictly speaking they weren't "on strike."

3) Finally, I never played in a band in a studio in NYC, but I like that one so if you wouldn't mind could we continue that myth? I'm going to open mind. Myspace page for that "band" the band's called "the old so and so's." I'm the rhythm guitarist and singer, songwriter. We're a no-hit wonder. Otherwise, heck it was a great piece!

Oh by the way we are not breaking up the big space – how could we? It's for TV and film production. Non-sensical. Like I said, I just wanted to email you so you knew the facts, I don't care about a correction.

Anyway thanks, talk soon!

Best regards, Mitchell Kriegman Wainscott Studios www.wainscottstudios.com www.pbskids.org/bigbigworld Via e-mail

ANOTHER DUMB IDEA

Dear Dan,

Ever have a few empty seltzer bottles to redeem, only to find some smelly homeless guy in front of you with three shopping carts full? Sometimes you just suck it up and wait. Then just as he puts the last bottle in the machine...yes, it's full!

If this is how you enjoy spending your Sunday mornings, hang on; you'll love the new proposal. A new law, if passed, will extend the bottle law to water, juice and other drink bottles. What are they thinking? Should I start adding a new room now to store these things, or should I attach a trailer to my car, where I already often have two or more bags full of these things clanging around waiting for an operable machine?

When it first started, the bottle law was a good idea. It got bottles off the beach and roadsides and gave a venue to recycling (there were no green cans yet). Today, the law is simply growing into an unmanageable monster. More often than not, machines are full, out of order, or have ridiculous waiting lines. The stores are victimized as they have to provide the manpower to service the machines, store the refuse and clean the constant mess (none of which is done very well in many cases). Then they have to do bookkeeping, as often they redeem more than they sell and have to beg for their money.

Perhaps the most ludicrous thing of all is what would happen under the new bill when bottles are not redeemed. Up to now, the beverage companies got to keep unclaimed deposits. This may not sound fair until you realize that this revenue helps keep down the price of their products. Under the new law, unclaimed revenue would go to the state. If you're thinking what I'm thinking, you're right...this is just another back door tax. The result? We will be paying more for a bottle of coke so that the displaced funds become the state's general fund. In addition, the manufacturers would also see a big drop in sales. I don't mind paying $5 for 24 bottles of water, but now the price goes to $6.20 + tax.

Before you pass judgment, take a long walk or bike ride and look at the garbage on the roadside. Bottles actually account for very little (even nonreturnable). Most of the debris is composed of fast food wrappers and cups, bags and, worst of all, scores of cigarette filters. Perhaps there should be a deposit on butts!

Let your reps know how you feel about this before it's too late. This bill is just another tax levy with massive annoyances for everyone.

Police Blotter

Weaving Around

A guy was pulled over by police in Montauk and charged with drunk driving after he was seen weaving in and out of the lanes and traveling at high speeds. When police pulled him over, he tried to explain to them that he was trying to get away from a giant crocodile that was chasing him on rocket skates. Police then arrested the man for possession of mind-altering drugs.

$20,000 Bucks, Rotten Kid

A teenager in East Hampton was pulled over by police because he was suspected of stealing $20,000 in cash from his father. While police questioned the young man, they found the cash in the center console of the car. They also found brass knuckles and a small amount of marijuana. They arrested him for possession of both. The teenager's father did not press charges for the theft of the cash, but he did change the code on his safe from his son's birthday to a more appropriate number.

Serial Cell Phoner

An East Hampton woman who previously racked up three tickets for driving while talking on her cell phone was pulled over, yet again. This time, police found her talking with her sister about the latest Britney Spears scandal and she just had to get her opinion. Police wrote her a ticket and hung up the phone. They are considering taking away her television and Internet privileges.

Drunk Driving

The dozens of drunk driving arrests made throughout the Hamptons reminds us that drinking and driving usually leads to a very serious charge and not to lousy sex at some random person's home that you will regret the next day.

Petty Theft

A man in Hampton Bays was caught stealing a bottle of Coke from a store by the clerk who called police and pressed charges. The man got to keep his Coke, but was not smiling when he was arrested.

Teenage Debauchery

Police broke up a high school party at a house in Southampton. The kids dispersed and a few students were issued summons. Really? Partying already? The school year just started for crying out oud.

Poop Doggy Dogg

A dog was caught pooping on the street in East Hampton and the owner did not clean up the mess. When a pedestrian confronted the dog's owner, she acted as if she had done nothing wrong. The argument drew the attention of a police officer, who broke up the argument and supervised the poop scooping.

Riverhead Whacko

A man in Riverhead was caught hitchhiking on the side of the road while not wearing anything other than a Mets hat. It is really no surprise that a Mets fan was caught doing this. In other news, a man with a Yankees cap was seen rescuing a cat from a tree. GO YANKEES!

Sag Harbor Gals

Four Sag Harbor teenagers were seen driving a red car after leaving the movie theater in East Hampton. They were driving very carefully and it was noted by a pedestrian, who reported the incident and then scooted away.
